JURYMEN VIEW ROBINSON IN CAGE

POLICE ON GUARD IN CORRIDORS

JURYMEN CHOSEN.

JUROR NO. 1—Taylor, Ralph G., clerk. No. 94 Belvidere street. The fifth venireman called.

JUROR NO. 2—Faber, Harry W., inspector, No. 19 Lithgow street. The eighth venireman called.

JUROR NO. 3—Freeman, Benjamin Franklin, auditor, No. 77 Draper street. The ninth venireman called.

JUROR NO. 4—Murphy, William J., contractor, No. 206 Kilton street. The tenth venireman called.

The trial of Lawrence Robinson, charged with murdering Police Inspector Thomas J. Norton, began today in the Superior Court, and out of the first ten veniremen, four were accepted toward the jury which is to try the accused man.

Out of the first fourteen veniremen—and a panel of over 300 were summoned for this trial—four were accepted, three challenged by Robinson, one by the Commonwealth, and six were excused.

Robinson and the Commonwealth each have twenty-two peremptory challenges.

Judge Keating entered the courtroom and the roll call of veniremen began about 10 o'clock. Robinson was brought into court at 10:46. Thereafter, the work of examining veniremen was at once commenced.

PRISONER DRESSED IN BLUE.

Robinson came into court with a group of court officers, walked to the prisoner's cage and sat down there. He was dressed as at the time of his arrest, in a blue, pencil-striped suit, blue and brown tie, black patent leather shoes, light shirt and soft, tan collar. His tie was loosely fastened and hung a little awry. He seemed somewhat embarrassed and bewildered.

The bringing of Robinson to trial so soon after the death of Inspector Norton broke all records for rapid criminal procedure in Suffolk County. Just over a month has elapsed.

Aside from the three hundred jurors drawn on the special venire, there were few people at the courthouse when the trial opened. Sheriff Quinn

"Eloped in Fear"—Fern Hallian

GIRL HEARD AT TRIAL OF EISMAN

Fern Hallian today on the stand at the secret trial in Boston Court of Louis Eisman, her father's chauffeur, charged with abducting her, told the story of their elopement and declared that she ran away with Eisman through fear. She stated, she feared to return, and went as directed, she said.

Eisman declared that he was opposed to the secret trial which Judge Kelley was holding and would demand a public trial.

Except the attorneys, the slayers and her parents and Chief of Police Reynolds of Hull, nobody was admitted to the courtroom.

Fern came in on a Metropolis from Hull, accompanied by her father, mother and a girl acquaintance. They waited in the car until Judge Kelley called them into the courtroom. Then Fern walked in with her mother.

As she was going into the court room, her father patted her on the back, telling her to be brave. She appeared very nervous.

Eisman came with his brother, Jr., Elbert H. Gary and Adrian Iselin, Jr., control the destinies of the Southern Railway, as well as the coal output of Pennsylvania and conspired to prevent the South from obtaining coal at fair prices, was the charge made today by Benjamin L. Dulaney of Bristol, Tenn., who is connected with the coal interests in upper Tennessee, before a sub-committee of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee.

South Charges Coal Conspiracy

WASHINGTON, July 20.—That George F. Baker, George F. Baker, Jr., Elbert H. Gary and Adrian Iselin, Jr., control the destinies of the Southern Railway, as well as the coal output of Pennsylvania and conspired to prevent the South from obtaining coal at fair prices, was the charge made today by Benjamin L. Dulaney of Bristol, Tenn., who is connected with the coal interests in upper Tennessee, before a sub-committee of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee.

300,000 WATCH WEBSTER

Three hundred thousand men, women and children saw the great flying exhibition arranged by the AMERICAN at Revere Beach yesterday afternoon. This total does not include the scores of thousands who witnessed the flights from Nahant, Winthrop, Beachmont and other points.

The 300,000 were massed up and down the length and breadth of Revere Beach.

It was the popular resort's record crowd.

The previous high water mark was 250,000—the record for Labor Day, 1906. This figure was equaled at the AMERICAN'S other exhibition at Revere on July 4.

Yesterday the total jumped a full 50,000. Superintendent West of the Metropolitan Park Police—the expert authority on the matter—called it an "easy 300,000—and perhaps more."

Without doubt no other New England resort, city or place generally ever saw such a vast gathering of people.

It was a splendid tribute to the AMERICAN'S enterprise in giving the most novel and delightful entertainment ever offered Greater Boston and New England folk—it was a remarkable outpouring of people to see something that was really worth while.

And Aviator Clifford Webster's wonderful feats in his Burgess-Dunne hydroaeroplane from Marblehead deserved the tremendous audience that watched his performance. And the great at throng ever at Revere enjoyed it to the last minute—to the last second of he masterful flying. It was interesting, instructive, entertaining, absorbing, thrilling, spectacular. Not in years has New England seen anything to tie with it for keen interest.

ALTITUDE ESTIMATES.

The special flying feature for the day was the daring Webster's aeroplane climbing, and with it was linked the endeavors of the great crowd to calculate the maximum height he reached.

Everybody—old and young, and the middle-aged and those whose ages ranged between—had in mind the AMERICAN'S prizes for the best estimate of this altitude mark. And seemingly everybody used the AMERICAN'S coupons for writing out their estimates and submitting them for the altitude contest.

Everybody tried their hand at it and everybody thought it was not only great fun but something that well merited the zest with which they all went at it.

All in all it was Revere's biggest day and the 300,000's biggest day.

And the estimates?

Well, they ran high and low and near the mark. And there were thousands upon thousands of them.

And the correct one?

Well, that's telling. Fact is, nobody knows but the judges—experts picked by the Burgess-Dunne Company of Marblehead—but even they don't know yet, for the correct altitude

WOMEN FRIENDS SAY THAT ADA WAS SLAIN

With the identification of the Winthrop murder victim as Ada Taylor, facts came to light this afternoon that caused the police to begin a search for a young Concord, Mass., man, who had long wanted to marry her. She had recently loaned him money. He had called to see her not long ago and she told him never to come to see her again when he had been drinking. She had visited his relatives, and had it not been for his occasional drinking, her friends declared today, she would have married him.

The police desire to find out from this man if he had been to Winthrop lately to see Miss Taylor, if they had quarrelled, and just what he knows about how she met her death.

The known facts brought to light today in the strange case were as follows:

The victim was Miss Ada Taylor, forty-two years old, born in Amherst, N. S., and for the past seven years living and working in and around Boston as a maid and nurse. She was quiet in her ways, refined, saved her money, read in the evenings, and had no man friends but the young Concord man.

Her only confidant was Mrs. Sadie Chandler, who was employed at the boarding house of Mrs. Adelaide E. F. Lord at No. 63 Pinckney street, where for the past nine months before going to Winthrop Miss Taylor had also worked as a maid, rooming at No. 87 Myrtle street, Beacon Hill, next door to where Mrs. Chandler and her husband lived.

TOLD OF MARRIAGE PROPOSAL.

She and Mrs. Chandler would often talk together in the evening and Miss Taylor told of how the Concord man who worked on a farm had wanted to marry her.

Since Miss Taylor went to Winthrop Mrs. Chandler had not seen her.

Both Mrs. Chandler and Mrs. Garvey believe that Miss Taylor was

AUTO BURGLARS IN SWAMPSCOTT STORE BREAK

Auto burglars raided Charles P. Jeffers' pharmacy in Burrill street, Swampscott, early today, getting away with over $500 in cash, which they rifled from a "burglar-proof" safe.

Joseph Smith, who lives nearby, heard an automobile outside the store some time between three and five. It stayed in the street about half an hour.

Jeffers discovered the robbery when he opened the store. Entrance had been gained through a side window, the screen over which was cut away and the window jimmied. There were no marks on the safe; the combination had apparently been worked.

It is believed the burglars are the same gang which jimmied the safe of the Burdett Company in Market street, Lynn, July 13, getting away with about $300 in cash and a diamond ring valued at $140.

PICKING JURY FOR TRIAL OF ROBINSON

commented, "I am surprised not to find a crowd here. I expected the corridors would be filled."

The courtroom where the trial began was well filled, however. There were over a hundred veniremen in the room, besides the attorneys, the court officers and the reporters. No spectators were admitted.

Judge Keating ascended the bench at 9:32 and Crier Andrew Crotty opened court.

Clerk John J. Manning, veteran of many trials, talked for a moment with Judge Keating at the bench. Meanwhile, in the bar inclosure the opposing council were making an occasional note, eyeing each other and the veniremen. District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier and his assistant, Mr. Webber, sat just in front of the judge. To Mr. Pelletier's left sat Hugh C. Blanchard, junior counsel for Robinson; and beyond young Blanchard sat his father, John H. Blanchard, senior counsel.

Clerk Manning began at 9:37 to call the roll of veniremen. As they responded, Crier Crotty called their numbers aloud—1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and so on, till he had counted 105. Then Clerk Manning asked: "Is there any juror in the room whose name I have not called."

A man with iron gray hair in the front row of the spectators rose and said his name was Charles H. Fagan, a teamster, and that he lives at No. 16 Champney street. Crier Crotty thereupon called "One hundred and six."

Then a short recess was taken.

OFFICERS GUARD CORRIDORS.

Meanwhile the corridors outside were guarded by a group of alert officers. A railing had been erected making an enclosure across the corridor outside the court room door.

There was a gate in this enclosure. Each person who appeared was called on for his credentials. Court Officer Webber was in charge here. None without credentials were admitted.

The officers in charge, directed by Sheriff Quinn, were Deputies William Leonard, Daniel Cronan and Andrew Crotty. Those who will have charge of Robinson are Deputies William Burns, James Lane, George White, Charles Heintz and John Gallagher.

There were several police inspectors in the corridor and in court. Inspector Conatihon watched every arrival. Mounted Officer Dickinson, who captured Robinson, was in the corridor.

When the jury is impanelled, it will be isolated under charge of court officers. Special quarters have been engaged at the Revere House, where the jurymen will live during the trial. They will be allowed to receive and send mail after it has been censored by the sheriff.

The officers who will have charge of the jury are Forest Starr, John Finley, Edward Tracy and Thomas Kline.

During the recess after the roll call of veniremen in the main trial room, the roll was also called in two other courtrooms where about 200 other veniremen were waiting. This occupied the time till after half past ten.

Meanwhile, in the courtroom where Judge Keating and the attorneys were waiting, Sheriff Quinn had ordered the electric fans shut off to stop their noise, and had sent a court officer to secure quiet in the yard beneath the courtroom windows.

PELLETIER MOVES FOR TRIAL.

After the recess, Mr. Pelletier rose and said: "May it please the court, I now move the trial of Lawrence Robinson on a charge of murder in the first degree.

Lieutenant John Rooney came in and sat down behind Mr. Pelletier, opening a card index. Captain Ainsley C. Armstrong of the Bureau of Criminal Investigation also sat down by Mr. Pelletier, and he and the prosecutor talked together for a minute. The court officers cleared all veniremen out of the jury box.

Clerk Manning arose and called: "Lawrence Robinson."

Immediately a hush fell upon the court. Eyes turned to a door behind the judge's bench. Sheriff Quinn moved over to this door. It opened, and Robinson entered.

He was accompanied by Officers William Burns, James Lane, George White and John Gallagher. The prisoner stood a head taller than any of them. As he reached the prisoner's cage he glanced at the reporters at their table. Before sitting down in the cage he pulled up his trousers at the knees, flushed, looked around, coughed "Ahem," put his hand to his mouth and tugged at his collar.

The cage where Robinson sat was a little behind the chairs of his counsel. He glanced at them, then fixed his eyes upon the judge. After a minute, Clerk Manning rose and said:

"You are set at the bar about to be tried. These good men have been called by the Commonwealth to pass upon you. You have the right to challenge twenty-two of them peremptorily, and as many more for cause as you wish.

FIRST JUROR CALLED.

The first juror called was Charles T. Chapin, a coal dealer, who took his place on the witness stand and was questioned by the judge:

Judge Keating—Are you related to the defendant or the deceased? A.—No.

Q.—Have you any interests in this case? A.—No.

Q.—Have you formed or expressed any opinion in regard to this case? A.—No.

Q.—Are you sensible of any bias or any prejudice in the case. A.—No.

Q.—Are you able to decide this case upon the evidence and in accordance with the law? A.—Yes.

Attorney John H. Blanchard asked: "Did you at the time of reading any paper form any opinion on this case?"

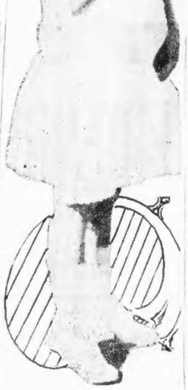

Judge Keating interposed and called a ten-minute conference at the bench, at the end of which time he repeated the question:

Q.—Have you formed or expressed any opinion in regard to this case? A.—I've talked about it.

OVER 300,000 SEE WEBSTER'S FLIGHTS AT REVERE BEACH

tifically measured altitude is as yet sealed up and will remain so until noon tomorrow.

This altitude mark is the one registered on the barograph—or altitude-measurer — which was sealed and installed in the aircraft just before it began climbing. The flight over, it was removed by Manager Frank H. Russell of the Burgess-Dunne Company for safekeeping until tomorrow.

By noon tomorrow all of your estimates must be at the AMERICAN Promotion Department. That is the time limit for getting into the contest for the AMERICAN'S $250 prize awards. There are fifty-two prizes—$100 for the best measurement; $50 for the second best; $25 for the third best; $15 for the fourth best; $10 for the fifth best; $5 for the sixth best, and $1 each for the next forty-five best estimates.

Aviator Webster's work was not only marvelous and spectacular, but it added new laurels to the many he already had won. It was topnotch aircraftmanship, and the folk on shore and boulevard and housetop and hilltop thrilled and thrilled again as they watched it.

The whole afternoon was a series of thrills.

Out of the northeast he came, at first a mere speck on the distant horizon.

So far as anybody could judge in that great crowd, a young woman in a black jersey bathing suit with crimson trimmings and red stockings and white shoes laced away up above her ankles and with a red rubber cap over her hair, was the first to pick him out.

There may have been others who saw him about the same moment.

Anyway, the young lady exclaimed: "There he comes!"

And those near her took it and began craning their necks, and passed the word along the shore, and the crowd's interest was so intense it was AUDIBLE. The stir was heard above the noise of the waves lapping the beach.

He came, flying close to the water—first between Nahant and Little Nahant, then swooping nearer, close inshore where everybody could get an intimate view, while everybody shouted and cheered and applauded, and while the daring young airman waved his hat in response to the roar of welcome.

Three times did young Mr. Webster, cool-nerved, steady-brained and with skilled hands, sweep the trim arrowhead-shaped hydroaeroplane up and down the beach. He was hardly more than thirty feet up, and easily visible to every one in the great throng.

BAROGRAPH SEALED.

Then after the third trip he slanted offshore, skimmed the water, cresting the waves as neatly as a bird and came to a rest.

Instantly a swarm of small watercraft—canoes and rowboats and motorboats and yachts—came around, giving vent to enthusiastic hooraya for Webster.

It was then that Manager Russell installed the sealed barograph. This is a small box-like apparatus in which there is a cylinder, revolved by clockwork. On the cylinder is a paper chart, marked in scale. An inked needle touches this chart. This needle is attached to a very sensitive barometer. As the hydroaeroplane rises, the needle marks off the scientifically accurate and exact altitude.

This chart, bearing the record of Aviator Webster's altitude flight yesterday, is the one which will be read by the committee of experts when the barograph seal is broken tomorrow AFTER every last one of the coupons bearing your estimates has reached the AMERICAN.

The barograph in place, Aviator Webster started away on his ladder-mounting expedition towards the clouds.

A stiff fifteen to twenty-five-mile wind blew from the north. A few fleecy clouds flew across the sky. The sun shone merrily. Generally it was ideal weather and an ideal day. The wind would have severely handicapped other aeroplanes, but because of the absolute stability of the Burgess-Dunne machine, flying was as safe as could be.

The crowds had been informed that while climbing the machine would be driven parallel with the beach, and that when Webster had finished climbing he would drive the aeroplane back and forth on a line perpendicular to the beach.

USE INDICATORS.

And so he started.

And as he did so scores of thousands of the onlookers—men, women and children alike — got ready the handy altitude indicators which they had clipped from yesterday's Sunday AMERICAN.

They practised with these as the aviator climbed, knowing that their thumbs or their eyes or their copy of the AMERICAN might be worth $100 to them if they could make the most accurate estimate of Webster's maximum altitude.

It was an unusual sight—thousands holding the altitude-indicators up, bringing the end in line with the aeroplane with their eyes, and using their thumbs to place the horizon and thus get an estimate of the height at which the aviator was flying.

He rose 150 feet on his first trip up and down the beach, and the gazers knew it because the proper use of the altitude-indicators told them so.

Higher and higher he rose, climbing ever farther into the blue. A dozen trips he made, the machine becoming smaller and smaller, and still he climbed. It was as if he were saying "Excelsior" to himself like the ambitious youth in the poem. Up and up he went to dizzy heights.

A dozen trips and then more, and still he was climbing.

Still the 300,000 gazed and gazed.

Then at last the aeroplane made a pretty turn at right angles from the centre of the beach and shot off toward the open bay.

"He's stopped climbing and this is the time to estimate the height!" was the general cry.

Aviator Webster flew several miles out and returned at the same elevation.

He had given the spectators a chance for a half dozen or more tries each.

DESCENDS TO SEA.

A second time he flew out straight over the sea at the same level as before and returned. Again the 300,000 made its estimates by using the altitude-indicators. Most of them were doing better at each try. They got so they could estimate between the hundreds.

The aviator made a third trip to let the vast throngs try even more.

His third trip, finished, he swerved off over Beachmont and Winthrop still at his maximum altitude, and then coming back over the beach, stopped the propeller and began coasting.

This was a wonderful spectacle in itself. No bird ever swooped more gracefully or easily down toward the water. As gently as a bird too the aeroplane lighted on the waves and came to a stop with scarcely a quiver.

By official timing Aviator Webster had been in the air thirty minutes, and had spent twenty-six of these minutes in climbing.

Not only did he keep the great multitude that watched him every second—until their necks and backs ached—not only did he keep them interested, but he achieved a wonderfully successful flight. None more successful has been made in New England—probably nowhere else.

FINAL FLIGHT.

But that wasn't the end.

After the watercraft had again come up close and cheered to the heart's content of those in the boats, Webster mounted his seat and started off on his final flight. This was up and down the beach not very high up. The crowds shouted their thanks and farewells at him, and then, the three exhibition flights being finished, off toward the Burgess-Dunne plant at Marblehead he sped.

On the first and last flights Webster carried a passenger, but he made the altitude flight alone.

The greatest crowd ever voted the exhibitions arranged by the AMERICAN the greatest exhibitions ever. One and all went home satisfied and filled with the joy and thrills of it all.

The Metropolitan Park police handled the crowds in excellent manner and the result of their being on the job was that Revere's biggest day was a credit to everybody.

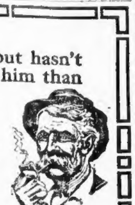

Today came the deluge of coupons containing the altitude estimates to the AMERICAN. Remember that they must reach the AMERICAN Promotion Department, No. 5 Winthrop square, Boston, Mass., by tomorrow noon. In next Sunday's AMERICAN the prize winners will be announced and at the same time will be printed a photograph of the barographic chart, showing the exact height attained by Aviator Webster yesterday afternoon.

MADAME CAILLAUX STIRS JURY

PARIS, July 20.—Madame Henriette Caillaux pleaded the "unwritten law" in a remarkable address to the jurors when put on trial today for shooting to death Gaston Calmette, editor of the Figaro, on March 16 last. Her plea apparently made a deep impression on the jury.

The wife of the former Minister of Finance declared that she had been actuated in shooting Calmette because she feared that he was about to publish some of her private correspondence with a view to compromising her honor.

"I feared Calmette was going to publish love letters written to me by my beloved husband," declared the prisoner. "I was moved to defend my name and the honor of my husband. We had not been guilty of any moral crime, but I feared that misconstruction might have been put upon the letters."

After the jury had been chosen and the court had completed his reading of the indictment, Mme. Caillaux was given permission to address the jurors. She had prepared a long rambling statement, written in her own hand, explaining how she had been led to shoot Calmette. She spoke in a voice that was scarcely above a whisper. At times she swayed and seemed in danger of collapse, but grasped the railing before her and rallied her strength.

CAILLAUX MAY CLEAR WIFE.

While the prisoner was speaking a sensational rumor was spread throughout the crowd to the effect that M. Caillaux might enter the witness box and assume full responsibility for the crime. According to this report the former minister would hold himself responsible on the ground his threats against Calmette, made in the hearing of his wife, had no more than Latin that through her intense love for her husband, she lost her head and decided to kill the journalist. Lawyers in the courtroom expressed the opinion that such action on Caillaux's part would undoubtedly result in acquittal.

The Palace of Justice bristled like fortress with armed troops as the beautiful and statuesque prisoner was led from her cell in the Conciergerie in the basement of the courthouse through secret doors and passages to the courtroom.

During the night she occupied a cell adjoining that which held Marie Antoinette in the days of the French revolution. Since the trial of Mme. Steinheil in November, 1909, public attention has not been aroused to such a high point as at the present trial. The intrigue of love and politics which lay beyond the assassination, and the wealth and social position of the prisoner tended to elevate it to a position to attract attention far beyond the borders of France.

Although no women were admitted to the courtroom, there were many of them in the crowd. Through fear that the interest of the populace, intensified by the political aspect of the case might result in an outbreak of rioting, the police and military authorities had co-operated. Several thousand police, soldiers and members of the Republican guards patrolled the corridors of the Palace of Justice and the neighboring streets.

It was announced that seventy-five witnesses would be called. Of these fifty-four will testify for the prosecution; ten will testify for the defence, and the remaining eleven will be called in behalf of the Calmette family to refute any charges that might be made against the private life of the dead journalist.

TWO QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Under the French criminal code the jurors are questioned in order to determine their judgment of the case. The court announced that but two questions would be put to the jurors. They are:

"Do you find Mme. Caillaux guilty of wilful murder?

"Was premeditation shown by the defendant?

"If the jurors reply affirmatively to both questions, the death sentence can be passed upon the prisoner. If both questions are answered in the negative, the defendant may be liberated. Any other verdict would entail a term of penal servitude.

When the world-famous trial got under way wagers were made that Mme. Caillaux would be acquitted.

Two women lawyers are associated with the defence of Mme. Caillaux. They are Mlle. Veronie and Mlle. Grunberg. The former enjoys the reputation of having a bigger clientele than any other woman barrister in Europe. It is rumored that copies of letters which Caillaux wrote to his wife before they were married will be introduced. According to political enemies of the former finance minister these epistles will show that Caillaux repeated important political secrets to the woman who subsequently became his wife, and that he held strange views upon the moral obligations of married men and women. Both Caillaux and his wife are divorcees.

JURY QUICKLY SECURED.

It required but little time to select twelve jurymen. Mme. Caillaux broke down after the jury had been secured. The indictment had been handed up to Judge Albanel for his perusal when suddenly the prisoner leaned forward, her head resting upon her arms, and broke into a fit of passionate sobbing.

THIS GIRL WAS MADE MOTHERLESS BY BULLET IN CARMAN TRAGEDY

This Winsome Miss, Whose Young Life Has Been Blighted by the Shooting Is Described as One of the Real Victims of the Fatal Bullet.

Made motherless by an assassin's bullet, Madeline Bailey, tall, winsome, just rounding eighteen years, presents the saddest figure in the strange Carman mystery.

"Your mother has met with an accident," said a voice over the phone the night her mother was slain.

Accident, indeed! Such a frightful accident that the mighty hand of the law has slid its fingers into the breach made by the pistol; such an accident that a young girl's heart has been tortured by every pang in the human gamut.

Innocent victim of a great tragedy is this girl bereaved by the heartless hand of a slayer and robbed of a mother's guidance.

She shares with Elizabeth Carman, nine-year-old daughter of the accused woman, the utmost sorrow.

The tearful figure of Madeline Bailey has run through the shuttle of this tragedy like a black thread—for she now wears sombre mourning for her dead mother. Her eyes have wept night and day in unconsolable grief for her chum and mother.

And into the sunny sky of Elizabeth's life have crept clouds that promise to overcast her future. Gradually she is awakening to the meaning of what has happened.

Are not these two girls the real sufferers? Young hearts are easily pierced by grief—here is grief so human, so transcending that it bids fair to blight two lives at their outset. Perhaps Elizabeth Carman has gathered but an inkling of the true situation, but that inkling, malignant and murderous, has darkened her pleasures.

Perhaps some day the load on Madeline Bailey's heart will lighten, perhaps the clouds will seem to blow from the horizon of Elizabeth Carman's future, but this much is true, tragedy has written its words indelibly across their path. Tragedy and mystery, the pair that have wrecked so many lives, seems to have sought out these two girls and made them victims.

Behind great tragedies one always finds the real sufferers—those to whom no physical pangs have come, untouched by knife or bullet, but into whose souls the barbs of grief have dug deep. Oh, the heartaches that some day Elizabeth Carman will fall heir to.

DR. CARMAN AND WIFE TRAILED BY THE SHERIFF

NEW YORK, July 20.—Though Mrs. Florence Carman has been freed on 120,000 bail pending her trial for manslaughter on the charge of killing Mrs. Louise Bailey on the night of June 30, every moment she is at liberty she will be under surveillance. This statement was made today by an official of Nassau County in explanation of the fact when the accused woman and her husband, Dr. Edwin Carman, set out Sunday in an automobile for their Pennsylvania farm they were followed by another machine carrying Sheriff Pettit and District Attorney Smith.

In this connection rumors were circulated in Freeport that the county officials had been warned that Mrs. Carman was contemplating a trip to Europe. No confirmation of this report, which originated among friends of the slain woman, could be secured, but the officials declared that if Mrs. Carman made an effort to leave the country she should be arrested on a charge of murder to prevent her departure.

Though the living principals in the tragic drama had left the scene of the murder, there was no lessening of efforts to secure evidence. Detectives were hunting for the weapon with which the crime was committed, and for Mrs. Carman, who, assisted by Attorney George M. Levy, counsel for Mrs. Carman, was seeking facts to break down the stories on which his client was indicted.

Subsequently Ulivi was repudiated by other scientists.

LEADERS AID KING IN HOME RULE PARLEY

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

LONDON, July 20.—Parliamentary action upon the home rule amending bill, which was designed to give the Unionists of Ulster province an opportunity to escape the operations of the home rule law, will be postponed until after the joint conference of all the big political factions at Buckingham Palace tomorrow.

Premier Asquith made official announcement to this effect in the House of Commons today. At the same time the Premier explained the called of the conference by saying:

"In view of the grave present situation regarding Ireland, King George has deemed it expedient to summon a conference at Buckingham Palace tomorrow."

The amending home rule bill was to have come up for second reading this evening. Premier Asquith said that, at the invitation of the King, he would preside at the conference.

In anticipation of an important announcement by the Premier the galleries of Commons were thronged. Special police precautions were taken to prevent the intrusion of suffragettes. After the Premier had spoken A. Bonar Law, leader of the opposition, got the floor and said that the Unionists in Commons accepted the King's invitation in a spirit of loyalty and patriotism.

Following Mr. Law, John E. Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, spoke, saying:

"While the Nationalists are in no wise responsible for the conference, we shall accept the invitation and John Dillon and myself will be present."

This statement was greeted with wild cheers from the Nationalists.

The composition of the conference, as tentatively outlined, will be as follows:

Representing the government—Premier Asquith and David Lloyd George, chancellor of the exchequer.

The opposition—A. Bonar Law, the Unionist leader in the House of Commons, and Lord Lansdowne.

The Irish Nationalists—John Redmond and John Dillon.

The Ulster Unionists—Sir Edward Carson and Captain James Craig, M. P.

At a special meeting of the cabinet Premier Asquith today outlined the draft of a plan which will be considered in the Buckingham Palace conference.

The big question to answer is this: Shall the government give way to Ulster covenanters and exclude the counties of Ulster province from the operation of the home rule bill; shall it push to enactment the amending home rule bill by which the people of Ulster are given the right of referendum to vote whether or not they be excluded from the workings of the bill; or shall the amending bill be withdrawn and home rule forced upon all of Ireland?

Bryan Refuses to Pay Dime for Collar Button

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Secretary of State Bryan displayed his thrifty spirit in a haberdasher's shop last week when he refused to pay ten cents a piece for collar buttons. The clerk offered the genial premier a set of three-for-a-quarter buttons.

"I want only one," said Secretary Bryan.

"That will be ten cents," replied the clerk.

"No, indeed," said the secretary hastily, "I won't pay ten cents for a single collar button. I know where I can get them down street for five cents."

He departed in search of the nickel buttons.

BEACH VICTIM TOLD OF MARRIAGE OFFER

NEW CLEW MAY AID IN CLEARING MYSTERY

murdered, as indicated by the wounds on the face, and both believe that robbery was the motive, either if she was killed by a stranger or by some one who knew that she had saved several hundred dollars.

In Winthrop the murder victim worked in the family of Frank Cedar as a maid and nurse. Cedar today went to the morgue and positively identified for the AMERICAN the body as that of Miss Taylor. Identification was also maed today by Miss Taylor's brother and by Herbert Lippitt, a boarder in the Ceder household.

The police were very anxious today to find Miss Taylor's suit case and trunk. They may contain letters which would throw light on the mystery.

She took her suit case when she left the Cedar house at Winthrop one week ago Sunday night. She took her trunk from the house on Myrtle street when she left to secure a position at Winthrop for the Summer. She said she was going to take a room on Hancock street, but if she did it could not be located today. She did not bring a trunk to the Cedar house in Winthrop.

WAS QUIET AND REFINED.

Mrs. Chandler said today:

"I cannot understand what happened to Miss Taylor. She had no friends except a young Concord man whom she had known for several years. She liked him, but he drank a little occasionally and for this reason she would not marry him."

Mrs. Garvey, with whom Miss Taylor roomed at No. 87 Myrtle street, went to the morgue today for the AMERICAN with Mrs. Chandler, and both identified the body. Mrs. Garvery said:

"When Miss Taylor left to go to Winthrop for the Summer she told me to be sure to have a room ready for her in the Fall as she would then come back to work for Mrs. Lord and wanted her room back. I told her I would as we liked her very much.

"She was quiet and refined. She had no men friends that I knew about. Only once did a man call. She was not in. He went away without leaving his name.

"When she left she said she was going to take a room on Hancock street for a few days before going to Winthrop."

BROTHER OVERCOME.

Leonard Taylor, a brother of the dead woman, went to the morgue early today and identified the body as that of his sister. He had seen sketches in the AMERICAN and had gone to the morgue out of curiosity. He nearly collapsed when he saw the body was that of his sister.

It was learned today that the girl had been employed for the past seven months, before going to Winthrop, at the boarding house of Mrs. Adelaide E. F. Lord at No. 62 Pinckney street, Beacon Hill. She was a maid there and gave perfect satisfaction. She left because she wanted to work in Winthrop during the hot months. She applied for a position at the employment office of Mrs. Sullivan on Tremont row and after three days was placed with the Ceder family in Winthrop.

The girl had a room on Hancock street, Beacon Hill, while she worked for Mrs. Lord, but this had not been located today.

Among others who called at the morgue and confirmed the identification was Miss Lessie Myrtle Taylor, formerly of Amherst, N. S., a relative of the dead woman.

The Ceder home where Miss Taylor was employed is at No. 359 Shirley street, Winthrop. Strangely enough, Leonard Taylor, her brother, has been employed in Winthrop, on Prescott street, for the past three weeks. The brother and sister knew that somewhere in Massachusetts both were working, but they had not seen each other for seven years.

EMPLOYED BY "AGENCY."

In an interview with an AMERICAN reporter, Mrs. Ceder said:

"Miss Taylor came to work for us three weeks ago last Friday. She was engaged for us by Mr. Lippitt, a boarder, at an employment agency in Boston. She was an excellent worker and thoroughly honest.

"I never thought Miss Taylor had any idea of committing suicide and I was thunderstruck when told she was the dead woman. I cannot understand it.

"She left my house very mysteriously a week ago yesterday. She received her wages in the afternoon.

"She was usually off Sunday afternoons but that Sunday night she did not return home."

"We waited up until after 9 o'clock for her and when she did not come home we went to bed and left the front door open for her.

APPEARED MELANCHOLY.

"Some time during the next hour and a half she must have come home and packed up her things for I got up at half past ten and went to her room. The door was locked and the key was on the outside.

"I looked in but she was not in the room and her suit case was missing. The back door was unlocked, and I suppose she left the house that way. Since then I have not seen or heard from her."

Persons living in the vicinity of the Ceder home, who saw Miss Taylor during the three weeks she was employed there, noticed nothing strange in the woman's actions, although a few of the storekeepers of whom she made purchases declare she often appeared melancholy.

Miss Taylor had been employed by the Ceders since June. She was engaged at a Scollay square employment bureau by Herbert Lippitt, a traveling salesman who lives with Mr. and Mrs. Ceder. The Taylor woman came to Boston from Amherst, N. S., several years ago and since that time has worked in several places in the Back Bay and other parts of the city as a nurse.

MURDER THEORY GAINS.

She was always regarded as a woman of excellent character and wherever employed is said to have given satisfaction.

The identification of the body has strengthened the belief the woman was slain and the police are today attempting to trace the movements of Miss Taylor from the time she left the Ceder home until she met her death in the water off the Winthrop shore.

The search for "Viola of Malden" was temporarily dropped, although it is believed Miss Taylor and the mysterious visitor at Fort Heath may have been the same woman.

Miss Taylor, according to her brother, was forty-four years of age, but looked much younger. She was slender of build and weighed about 110 pounds, which accounted, it is said, for her youthful appearance.

Immediately after Taylor had identified the body at the morgue he sent a wire to Tidnish, N. S., notifying the family of her death. The wire reads as follows:

"Ada's body here at City Morgue. Drowned at Winthrop. Will ship body home. Will telegraph you the time later."

The scene at the City Hospital Morgue was touching.

Leonard Taylor had not seen his sister for seven years, but the moment his eyes rested on the features of the woman he stepped back, staggering a few paces.

"That is she," he said.

Employer Tells How Woman Disappeared from His Home

Frank Ceder, fruit dealer of No. 490 Shirley street, at whose house, No. 365 Shirley street, Winthrop, the murdered woman, Ada Taylor, was employed from June 21 to July 12, said immediately after he identified her body at the City Hospital Morgue today:

"It is she. I knew her the minute I put my eyes on her. I looked twice to make sure. Her face is bruised awfully. Her forehead is bruised, as if she fell face down on a lot of stones.

"Her dress suit case she took away with her. Where is it? It was a straw, cheap one. She was always busy when in the house. She whistled and seemed happy. She took good care of my children. They never met anybody so far as I know when she took them out. My little girl is five and she would tell her mother if they had met anybody.

"What she did while she was away from the house I can't say. So long as she came home all right and in good season I had no reason to find fault.

"Her whistling was funny. I would hear her whistling and look at her and you couldn't see her mouth move. She whistled nice, too.

"When she would come home Sundays from her day's outing my wife would say, 'Have you had supper?' and she would say 'Yes.' My wife would ask her if she could not treat her to ice cream, but she didn't seem to want to let her.

"I didn't know that she wore glasses. She had half of a glass which she put up to her eye to read with.

"I tried to find out where she worked and where she came from. I asked her for a reference and she said she would write to her last employer.

"She said afterwards when I asked her, that she had not got an answer to her letter. I wanted a reference because I left my children to her care and I wanted to know it would be all right that they wouldn't be killed or anything.

"She came to work for me three weeks ago last Sunday. She disappeared last Sunday. She was paid up to date and aside from the fact that she left without giving any notice we thought nothing unusual of it. We thought perhaps that she had found a place where she would be paid more money.

SOUTH END FRIENDS.

"I never say her with anybody. Neither I nor my wife knew of her having any friends. She told my wife that she had a few friends in the South End, Boston, hut she didn't say who they were, men or women. She did her work well. She would get mu supper for me when I got home and I noticed her then. She was a quiet girl."

The price, much under the supposed figure, is only one of the unexpected shrinkages in the fortune.

HUERTA DEFIES FOES; LINGERS ON NATIVE SOIL

PUERTO MEXICO, July 20.—Laconically smoking cigarette after cigarette and frequently sipping from the cognac bottle that has been his constant companion ever since he fled from the capital, General Huerta today defied his foes and declared his intention of staying on Mexican soil until all his party can sail and be assured of safety on the sea.

Though agents of the rebels are reported to have followed Huerta here with the intention of assassinating him, and a force of revolutionists is said to be approaching the town from the North, the former dictator showed no trace of any break in the iron nerve that has characterized his every move since he rose to power.

It was against Huerta's protest that a shift was made in the location of the private car in which he came from the capital and which he has made his headquarters since arriving here. General Rincon, commander of the local garrison, had it moved two hundred yards, and now it is protected from attack by the guns of the gunboat Bravo, lying just off the shore.

Rincon also stationed troops to guard all approaches to the city. This careful military guard will be maintained until the arrival of the steamer Mexico, on which Senora Huerta and all members of the Huerta party, with the exception of the former dictator himself, General Blanquet and officers of the general staff, expect to sail for Jamaica.

As soon as the Mexico sails Huerta and Blanquet will board the German cruiser Dresden, with their aides, and leave the country.

Many Accidents in Paris Balloon Race

PARIS, July 20.—Reports received by the Aero Club of France today from aeronauts who started yesterday in the Grand Prix balloon race indicate that a number of the balloons went across the English Channel and narrowly escaped being blown out to sea. Another fell into the channel and the pilot was rescued with difficulty by a steamer near Havre. One of the balloons landed near Rhybe, Wales, on the coast of the Irish Sea, after a flight of fifteen hours. Another was blown to earth near Aberystwith, Wales, and M. Spiere, the pilot, sustained a fractured leg.

Girl Cashier Is Saved by Jump

Miss May E. O'Neill, cashier of a lunch room at No. 245 Washington street, saved herself from injury by jumping over a cigar counter when an automobile crashed into the plate glass window.

FIREMEN FIGHT $12,000 PEARL STREET BLAZE

Fire early today in the building at Nos. 145 and 147 Pearl street, occupied by the Landers Bros. Company, gave the firemen a stiff battle, causing damage estimated at $12,000.

The blaze was discovered by Patrolman Lawrence Welsh of the Court Square station. He noticed smoke issuing from windows on the third floor and sounded the alarm. When the fire apparatus arrived, the flames had worked their way through the fourth floor to the roof. Dense clouds of thick smoke poured from the building.

Members of Engine Company No. 25 worked on the Pearl street side of the building. Enginmen Stanlaws Mijewelowski, William Coughlan and Paul Howard were perched on top of a ladder at a window on the fourth floor, manning a line of hose. The smoke, caused by burning cotton and burlap, prevented them from entering the building. More than once it was thought that they would be overcome and fall from their precarious position.

Ladders were erected against the back of the building, which faces Gridley stret. Engine Company 26 worked there. Their action prevented a large quantity of celluloid sheets stored in the roof from burning.

J. O'Reay, manager of the Queen City Ink Company, located on the first floor of the building, said his company will suffer a large loss from water. The fire was caused by spontaneous combustion. A fireproof wall on either side of the burning structure prevented the flames from spreading to adjoining buildings.

M'REYNOLDS SEES DIRECTORS OF NEW HAVEN

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Attorney-General McReynolds today received a delegation of New Haven directors who came from New York to make a final attempt to adjust the relations between the New Haven and the Boston & Maine properties and prevent the filing of a dissolution suit by the Department of Justice. Those taking part in the conference were T. Dewitt Cuyler, J. H. Hustis, president of the New Haven; Arthur T. Hadley, president of Yale University, and Moorfield Story, counsel for the New Haven.

The conference was arranged following a refusal of the directors at their New York meeting to comply with the Massachusetts law which was prepared especially to expedite the divorce of the two roads.

The belief that compromise was being negotiated was strengthened when the New Haven directors left the Department of Justice after an hour's conference, and, escorted by the Attorney-General's secretary, proceeded to a room in the Shoreham Hotel, from where, it was understood, they telephoned to other directors in New York the details of the Attorney-General's proposal.

Hustis said that the directors probably would have something to say later in the day. All parties to the conference declined to talk for the present. It was learned that Attorney-General McReynolds has decided that no criminal prosecution should be brought against directors of the road. It was reported also that in the event he should file a suit for dissolution of the New Haven from the Boston & Maine it probably would not be pressed in the courts until the Massachusetts Legislature shall have been given another chance to untangle the affairs of the roads.

Caminetti Lauds Boston; Immigration Post in Providence

It is probable that a branch of the United States immigration service will soon be established in Providence under the direction of the commissioner of immigration at Boston, as are the Portland and New Bedford stations, but will be under the immediate direction of a resident inspector-in-charge.

Commissioner-General A. Caminetti of the Immigration Service came to Boston yesterday and was for several hours in conference with Commissioner George B. Billings, Deputy Commissioner J. J. Hurley, Inspector John A. McCabe of the Chinese department and other officials. Later he left for Providence with Deputy Hurley and Inspector McCabe.

Although Boston immigration officials were unwilling to discuss the matter today, it was leaned that Commissioner-General Caminetti was not in sympathy with the conclusion of the congressional commission investigating the immigration service that there was wholesale Chnese smuggling in this district. The numerous prosecutions show officials are alert here, he is quoted as saying.

BEST MAN GIVES GOOD ADVICE IN BRIDAL SPEECH

A marriage ceremony with a public speech by the best man, to the bride and groom, was the novelty of the marriage of Albina Nowobrelska, nineteen, to Alexander Lubachomiski, twenty-three, at No. 2 Spear place, off Pleasant street. Peter Lubachomiski was the best man. Just before the couple were pronounced man and wife he stepped forward and said:

"Every couple should have a little advice upon this occasion. I want to say these words to the groom: Don't stay away from your wife evenings. Go home from your work. If you can, take her something to tell her you are thinking of her. If the food cooked is not good, say it will be better next time. Always bring in the kindlings for her, and if she wants to make the fire the next morning let her do it, but give her the things to make the fire with. Don't ask her if you give her fifteen cents what she did with it. Every woman should have a little money weekly to do what she wills with it.

"To the bride I want to say: Make your husband's money go far. Use it carefully. Put aside weekly something for the days that you can't work. Keep things clean. Always have meals on time and have them warm. Don't go around and leave your husband alone evenings. He will go out, too, and that will make trouble. Buy simple dresses, and, above everything, try to make your own dresses. Don't waste food and don't buy the things that you do not want. Always kiss your husband when he comes home from work."

A SCIENTIFIC WAY TO REMOVE UNSIGHTLY HAIR

Apply a few drops of El Rado, the liquid hair remover, on the growth; after washing off with a little plain water not a trace of it will remain. The ingredients in El Rado are used by many physicians for exactly the same purpose, which proves conclusively how perfectly harmless it is.

This wonderful preparation is the result of a long series of scientific experiments, and is proving a veritable godsend to women troubled with hair growths on lip, chin, cheek, neck or arms. Use a simple application of El Rado to saturate the hair; it is harmlessly dissolved, and in a few moments is gone, leaving the skin smooth, clear and velvety. The action of El Rado is absolutely safe, sure and thorough.

El Rado is coming to be regarded by society women as indispensable as face cream or toilet powder. Test it on your arm; prove for yourself it will do everything claimed. Your money back if you are not entirely satisfied. In 50c and $1 size bottles at all leading drug and department stores or direct from the Pilgrim Mfg. Co., New York. MATTY BALDWIN SEEKING BOUT WITH KILBANE

By JACK CONWAY.

EDDIE MURPHY, who manages Matty Baldwin when he is not doing the Daniel Webster act on Beacon Hill or trying to win a few more votes for his friend, Senator "Jim" Brennan, who is a candidate for Congress in the Tenth Congressional District, today declared that he was anxious to match the Bunker Hill "Bearcat" for a bout with Johnny Kilbane, the featherweight champion.

Murphy says that Baldwin is willing to reduce to 130 pounds ringside for a contest with the title holder. The Charlestown Representative says that his protege only weighed 131 the day before his bout with Gilbert Gallant and he is certain that he could made 130 pounds ringside without impairing his remarkable fighting ability.

Gilbert Gallant is anxious to secure a return bout with Baldwin, but Murphy says that the Chelsea youth will have to wait a few months before he gets a date with Matty as the latter has several matches in view. He has been promised a bout with the winner of the Johnny Dundee-Grover Hayes whirl, which takes place in Juarez, while he believes he will be able to induce Kilbane to battle him at the Atlas A. A.

ALL-STAR boxing shows are again in favor with the "fans," and the Atlas A. A. has arranged one of these popular attractions for tomorrow night. It is usually customary to have three ten-round bouts, but Matchmaker Johnny McGann has arranged a fourth session of ten stanzas for good measure.

The complete card is as follows: Walter Butler, Revere, vs. Eddie Flynn, Lynn; "Young" Jasper, North End, vs. Joe Farren, East Boston; Terry Brooks, Boston, vs. Andy Cortez, New York, and Jack Read, Australia, vs. Frankie Mack, Beachmont.

If all of the tussels go the limit, the "fans" will witness forty rounds of boxing, and, as the boys are well matched, there should be plenty of action.

BUTLER and Flynn should put up a rugged contest. These two boys are old rivals and have always shown to advantage when pitted against each other. When they met at Cambridge a few weeks ago, Butler won by a slight margin, but Flynn came back and held his own with the Beachmont youth at the Arena last Tuesday.

"Young" Jasper and Joe Farren compose another team which should give satisfaction. Jasper will outweigh Farren by a few pounds, but Lou Kelley's protege is the kind of fighter who does not worry a great deal about a little difference in weight and should carry the husky North End lad along at a merry clip. These boys met at a recent show at the Atlast Club and Jasper was awarded the decision at the end of eight rounds of hard fighting.

THE third bout of the evening, which will be between Terry Brooks, who now makes his home in this city, and Andy Cortez, of Brooklyn, should furnish plenty of sport as both boys are aggressive fighters and sweet punchers. Brooks is not a bit bashful in stating that he will punch his way to a decisive victory.

The show will be completed with a bout between Frankie Mack, of Beachmont, and Jack Read, the Australian lightweight champion. These two young men should put up a fast, brilliant contest as both are skillful boxers and hit hard, clean blows.

Mack has made a fine record in the ring during the past year and if he wins from Read he will hurl a challenge at Matty Baldwin, Eddie Murphy and Gilbert Gallant. Read, however, is the kind of a boxer who is in the habit of surprising ambitious ring men and he may hand the Beachmont boy a setback.

IT now looks as though Georges Carpentier and "Gunboat" Smith would not meet in a return match before December at the very earliest. The French heavyweight is booked to clash with Bombardier Wells, England's hopeless "hope," while he is also contemplating going on the stage for a couple of months.

Smith should be able to keep busy in Europe in the meanwhile if he is anxious to fight. Frank Moran is still in France and nothing would please him better than a whirl with the gunner. Jess Willard would also like to get a date with Smith while we do not believe that Sam Langford, our fellow townsman, would refuse to make the trip across the big mill stream if he were offered a match with Jim Buckley's one-punch fighter.

Williams Forced Into Five Sets to Win

SEABRIGHT, N. J., July 20.—It required the full five sets for R. Norris Williams, 2d, as the challenger, to beat T. R. Pell, holder of the Achelis cup, in the final of the test tournament for the Davis cup team on the turf courts of the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club. The score was 6—4, 4—6, 4—6, 6—3, 6—3.

The first three sets were fought as a duel from the baseline. At long range playing Pell, once he had settled into his game, surprised the spectators by outplaying Williams. His strokes were decidedly superior and his strategy often had the Davis cup man wide of the spot through which Pell shot the ball.

Eddie McGoorty to Meet Carpentier

SYDNEY, N. S. W., July 20.—Eddie McGoorty, the American pugilist, has accepted terms to meet Georges Carpentier in London in October for a purse of $10,000. The offer was cabled here to London promoters.

TY COBB'S COLUMN OF BASEBALL GOSSIP

Written for the Boston American.

By TY COBB.

Indianapolis has the honor of being one of the greatest "mothers" of ball players in the country. In fact, I think that the Hoosier capital, for its size, has turned out more big leaguers than any town in the country.

There is a big field called the "State field" in Indianapolis, and on this lot scores of boys who afterward have been able to mak good in professional ball have secured a start.

George Dauss and Donie Bush of the Tigers are two boys who learned how to handle the pill on the "State field," and they now rank with the stars of the American League. These two fellows grew up neighbors and after being separated in baseball for half a dozen years finally got together again on the Detroit club.

TEAMS REPRESENT MANY STATES.

It is the rarest thing in the world for two men from the same section of a town to be on the same ball club. Usually, the roster of a big league represents twenty States and there was one club which went South in the Spring with twenty-three favorite sons in the party.

California has a delegation with the Tigers, Stanage, Vitt and Hellman being "native sons," while John B. Williams, the Hawaiian pitcher, played his first professional ball in the Golden State. Indiana is well represented with Bush, Dauss and Boehler.

While the Tigers were in Philadelphia recently Dick Harley, a former big leaguer, called on some of his old friends, as he always does when we are in town. The players began to talk about his career on the diamond and I imagine from what I have heard that he used to be a terror to basemen.

He used to wear spikes three-quarters of an inch long and with a razor edge, they tell me, and he got all the room he wanted on the base lines after he had cut down a few fellows who tried to get in his way.

BUTCHERY NOW PAST.

According to all reports, Harley left a trail of maimed and bleeding victims in his wake whenever he got on the paths and some of the men who disputed the right to the lines with him will carry the marks of his spikes to the grave.

John McGraw is one of those whom Harley butchered, the wound received from Dick's steel putting an end to John's active career.

Nobody can blame Harley much at that, for he played in the times when one ball player was always threatening to "get" another, and I understand that he didn't go after anybody who hadn't issued a challenge to him first.

But you couldn't get away with that sort of thing now. The "fans" do not got to the grounds to see somebody cut all to pieces, but to see games decided on heir merits.

Somebody was telling a story about Bill Phillips, the Indianapolis Federal League club's manager, the other day. It seems that one afternoon, years ago, Bill was pitching, when a batter fouled off eighteen consecutive balls, doing it on purpose to aggravate the hurler and make him work.

Finally, Phillips got tired of this sort of thing and, walking up to the plate, calmly hit the sportive batsman in the jaw and knocked him down. Then he went back to the mound and resumed his labors.

Those must have been happy days.

PIRATES' SLUMP A SURPRISE.

"Can the Pirates come back?" is the question that National League fans are asking themselves. The Clarke tribe's slump was one of the surprises and shocks of the season and nobody seems able to account for it at all.

Unless the Smoky City boys get themselves together and begin to win some ball games, it looks to me as though they're done.

I hand it to "Buck" Herzog for doing a great job in putting the Reds in the first division. His material is not the best in the world, take it all the way down the line, but the men are hustling and playing ball all the time, which counts for a lot.

It would be a great thing for baseball if the Reds won the pennant some day. Cincinnati would go mad over a winning club, and the fans deserve one after putting up with a poor outfit for so many years. The only trouble about grabbing a flag in Cincinnati is that the team would have to keep on winning forever or the knockers' brigade would make life unbearable for the players as soon as they fell into a slump.

STAR CARD FOR REVERE CYCLE OVAL TOMORROW

Three of the fastest motor-paced riders in the world and two of the greatest sprinters will be seen in action at the Revere cycle track tomorrow night when George Wiley, Leon Didier and Clarence Carman come together in a twenty-five-mile motor-paced race, and Caesar Moretti, the Italian champion, meets Frank Cavanaugh in a match sprint race, best two in three heats.

Wiley, Didier and Carman have conclusively proved themselves to be the leaders of their class, with the exception of Bobby Walthour, whose recent injuries make it impossible for him to ride at present. Only after the hardest efforts did Manager Nat Butler manage to bring this trio together.

The thousands of fans who saw Wiley and Didier at the beach oval during the past week knew that these two riders are now at the top of their form. After a series of injuries Wiley is himself again, as he proved in last Tuesday night when he covered thirty miles in better than forty-three minutes—exceptionally fast time for the Revere saucer—with very little pushing.

PLAN NEW SET OF RACES FOR CUP DEFENDERS

NEW YORK, July 20.—An additional set of races, extending possibly into the fourth week of August may be arranged for the three cup defenders, Resolute, Vanitie and Defiance. Plans are being discussed by the America Cup Committee because of the unsatisfactory results of the races at Newport last week.

It has been suggested that after the first runs of the New York Yacht Club cruise, beginning July 31, and the races for the cup yachts on August 6 and 7 off Newport, the boats continue on August 8, 10 and 11, and perhaps on the 12th. Such a series would necessitate the postponement of the first final trial race from August 15 to August 18, with this closing series ending on the 27th, instead of the 22d.

The schedule arranged at the beginning of the season called for a series of ten races off Newport in the first two weeks in July. Owing to adverse weather conditions and other circumstances only four contests were finished, while in only one was the wind sufficiently true to give the America Cup Committee anything like valuable data upon which to base its judgment as to the speed of the yachts.

OUTDOOR MEETS ATTRACT LOCAL ATHLETIC STARS

By FRED HOEY.

Amateur track and field athletes throughout New England will have plenty of chance to show their form within the next two weeks. The first outdoor meet of the Irish-American Athletic Club is scheduled to be held at Locust street grounds next Saturday and a week later the Scotch picnic, under the auspices of the Boston Caledonian Society, will be held at Caledonian Grove, West Roxbury.

The Irish-American meet is the first outdoor venture of the new organization, but the entries are being filled so fast that one of the best set of games in New England is expected to develop if all the men show up.

The athletic committee is endeavoring to arrange a special sprint race between Howard Drew, the colored flyer, and Charlie Rice of the University of Maine, holder of the New England intercollegiate championships in both dashes. It is doubtful if Drew competes. He is now in Winnipeg and it is unlikely that he will reach here in time to compete. If he fails to compete a good-looking local field will be on hand to match their skill against the auburn-haired collegian.

Big Leaguers Bid for Long Branch Stars

NEW YORK, July 20.—Big league scouts and magnates are negotiating with the Long Branch Cuban Baseball Club management for the services of the many stars developed during the present season. Every one of the infield players is wanted by the big leaguers. The infield is composed of the greatest collection of young stars on a minor league team, including Baranda, first baseman; Hungo, second baseman; Romanach, shortstop, who was wanted by the Brooklyn Nationals last Spring, and Aragon, third baseman. Every one of these youngsters is hitting far above the .300 mark.

Pitcher Acosta, who is only seventeen years old, is the sensation of the Atlantic League, having won 14 out of 15 games. He has wins over the Giants and St. Louis Browns also.

Baranda is batting .370, Hunga .365, Aragon .430 and Romanach .385. The Pittsburgh Nationals, Philadelphia Athletics and the Federal League have made offers for Third Baseman Aragon.

Stoddard to Be on Next U. S. Polo Team

NEW YORK, July 20.—Louis Stoddard will be a member of the American polo team which will go to England to bring back the international trophy. In all probability he will be made captain of the team. He is favored for that important position by the majority of the polo committee.

It is also a sure thing that when the American team goes to England either J. M. Waterbury or Lawrence Waterbury will not accompany the players. Just which one will be dropped from the team has not been definitely decided upon at the present time. In all likelihood it will be Lawrence Waterbury. It is known that he has stated that he is willing to step aside in favor of a younger man.

Sullivan Believes England Has Chance

NEW YORK, July 20.—James E. Sullivan, who has just returned from the International Olympic Congress in Paris believes the United States must beat England in the Olympic games at Berlin in 1916. The British, he says, have awakened and will leave no stone unturned to beat the United States just once in the Olympic games.

WALTER CAMP'S COLUMN

Written for the Boston American

By WALTER CAMP.

THERE is a great deal of discussion in England and our country, too, regarding the question of changes in the British system of conducting The amateur golf championship.

A letter on the subject has been sent out to every golfer who participated in the championship by Angus Hambro, M. P., and one of Britain's best golfers, in which he suggests a 36-hole qualifying round for three days' play, to determine the thirty-two men who are to play 36-hole matches until all save the champion are eliminated.

It seems to be the general belief in English golfing circles that the championship has outgrown the 18-hole match play from the beginning of the tournament straight through to the last day.

* * *

WHILE we do not venture an opinion as to the merit of our system as against the manner in which the Britons choose to conduct their championship, the discussion really turns on the question, whether golf championships should depend more upon match or medal play, or, as we run ours, a mixture of both.

After all is said, medal play is the purer golf test and it is a wise provision that requires a player to produce a medal score before qualifying for match play. The wisdom of our system and its justice both to good and bad players is apparent.

THE impression is gaining ground that Sir Thomas Lipton may have at last discovered a boat, in Shamrock IV., that will lift the Cup, for which he has often striven in vain.

Nicholson, Sir Thomas' right hand man, Burton, the sailing master, and Captain Turner are all satisfied with the preliminary experiences of the boat. They consider the Shamrock IV remarkably fast and are busying themselves to decide which rig is best adapted to bring out her finest points.

It may be decided to restore the part of the keel that was removed to enable the boat to crowd on more sail. The designer has so arranged it, that this can easily be done, if deemed wise.

Detroit Team After Brockton Outfielder

Merwin Jacobson, star outfielder of the Brockton team of the Colonial League, is being sought by the Detroit team of the American League. Jacobson is the leading hitter of the team and shows all signs of a coming star. Scout Burk of the Detroit team has watched Jacobshon perform and has informed Manager Jennings that he is a likely youngster.

Welsh Names Terms for Championship Bout with Ritchie

LONDON, July 20.—Harry Pollock, manager of Freddie Welsh, lightweight champion of the world, gave exclusively to the AMERICAN today an announcement which undoubtedly means that Willie Ritchie will have the first chance at winning the title from the Briton.

Welsh's demands are reasonable enough, and leave Ritchie little opportunity to object, as follows:

1—Ritchie must give Welsh the same terms as Welsh conceded to Ritchie in the Olympia contest, namely $15,000 guarantee, with the privilege of getting 50 per cent. of the gate receipts and $10,000 in cash for relinquishing his interest in the "movies."

2—Ritchie must make the $25,000 side bet he states he is willing to make.

3—Ritchie must box at the weight whereat he won the championship from Wolgast, namely, 133 pounds ringside.

Welsh will first meet Ritchie in California; second, accept a California referee and third, agree that Ritchie shall have the match within six months from the time he fulfills the stipulations as to the purse and side bet.

BOSTON CLAIMS BEST SWIMMERS IN THE COUNTRY

Boston today claims the champion long distance swimmers of the United States if not of the world as a result of the showing of the local boys in the Battery to Sandy Hook swim yesterday in New York, an estimated distance of twenty-two miles. Thirty men, the pick of the long distance swimmers of the United States started over the long course at 4:45 a. m. and but four finished and of these three were Boston men.

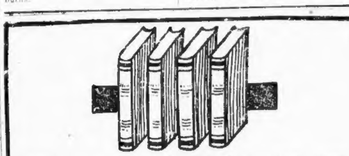

George R. Meehan of Charlestown finished first and established a new record for the course, covering the distance in seven hours and eighteen minutes. Sam Richards of South Boston was second and Walter Dunn of Norfolk Downs was third.

Meehan is a well known figure in Boston aquatics. He has won many victories in swimming races in New England and holds many championships. His victory yesterday was expected by many as he displayed wonderful form in his preliminary training. He lives at No. 16 Allston street, Charlestown and is a member of the Brookline Swimming Club.

Charles Durborow of Philadelphia finished fourth, Fred James of New York, fifth and Gus Wise of Boston, sixth, although the later two did not compete the entire swim.

During the first hour of the contest the swimemrs had to battle against the end of the flood tide. When the tide changed, however, and until the leaders got within a half mile of Sandy Hook, they had the tide with them. Then they had to swim across the swift incoming current and land on Sandy Hook in order to finish the race.

Fred H. James of New York, a fifty-year-old veteran, made a stubborn effort to finish, but he had to be picked out of the water when within 1,000 yards of the goal.

TAD ILLUSTRATES CARPENTIER'S METHODS OF FIGHTING

RED SOX PLAY TIGERS IN FOURTH OF SERIES

By NICK FLATLEY.

The peppery Tigers give their last lesson in how to play scrappy baseball, good breaks or bad, out at the Fenway ball lot this afternoon. Just now they have a two-one edge on the present series, though had the Carrigans performed as they should Saturday the shoe would be on the other foot.

Five and a half games away from the Mack team, the Lannin outfit has a long, hard chase ahead, not a berth at the heels of the leaders and an easy opportunity to step into the drivers' seat with a little good luck.

The Tigers just at present, without Cobb, Moriarity and Burns, three of their most valuable regulars, are sailing along like champions, simply because they have the pennant bug. The Boston players, better on form as an all round team, lack just this one thing to go out and do a cleanup stunt. They go along, have been for a month, until the big prize is just ahead and then the lights go out.

The air just now is thick with rumors of big trades of star players, and this no doubt is having its effect on the ball team. Speaker, whose name has been frequently mentioned as a possibility in deal, is a bit off his game these days, though he is working at all times with might and main to come through. And the same holds good for others.

NO TRADE, SAYS LANNIN.

So far as any Speaker shift is concerned, President Lannin has said again and again that he considers his centre fielder the greatest ball player in the world and would not trade him for all the money in the country. And the head of the club is sincere.

Further, it is mighty hard to see where the great Ty Cobb, mentioned as the other end of the trade in question, would be as valuable an asset to the Red Sox, as Spoke. He may lead the latter a bit in the averages, but the Red Sox star has the edge by a few miles, in ability to be on the job every day in the season. Cobb is frequently hurt and thereby useless to his team, while Speaker never seems to suffer any injury that can keep him from covering West Somerville for the Red Sox.

What's more Ty is generally considered a disturber and has, if reports are to be believed, stirred up more or less bother in the Tiger ranks in days gone past. The same has never been said of Speaker. Nor does the latter ever get his name in the papers for rows outside the ball grounds.

There is nothing in the world that is so likely to shake up a team and put it off its stride as the idea among the players thereof that they are likely to be let out. Especially when some of them are beginning to get into the veteran class as are certain Boston players. All of which may be a perfectly trustworthy alibi for the way things have been going of late with Clan Carrigan.

EASIER GAME AHEAD.

So far as their present stand in the race is concerned, they hit the trails in a few days. Could they have set out on the road a few games better off than at present, a bad streak of luck would not be fatal.

As things stand now, however, a week in the dumps and they are practically out of it, with the Athletics daily battering out runs in big bunches. Knowledge of this fact likewise is not at all good for a team, as a couple of defeats are likely to get the players worrying and crabbing, which state naturally puts them off their game.

However, with easier games than the Detroiters looming ahead for the rest of the home stand, in the persons of the Browns, and the fact that the road collision opens up in Cleveland, may spruce things up a bit.

Then perhaps we may have a chance to get our old friend Sisyphus off our minds.

The new first base acquisition, Dick Hoblitzel, is overdue to appear in these parts, and when he does show, it's a pretty safe bet that he will be put in the lineup.

TIGER FINAL TODAY.

Janvrin has been way off in his batting the past week or so, and Gainer has been given up as a chronic victim of charley horse, as witness President's Lannin's asking for waivers.

Big Richard should help ginger things up a bit, as he is a fiery individual with a healthy kick in his bat. His surroundings the last season have not been any too pleasant to him and perhaps new associates will bring him to life. A first baseman with a consistent habit of delivering the punch goes a mighty long way in making any team a winner.

As regards today's final battle, "Dutch" Leonard or Bedient should be called in to pitch for the Carrigans. Both did a little work Saturday, but not enough to hurt them any and both looked good enough to be given a trial over the full route against the hard hitting aggregation just now in our midst.

From the Detroit end, Main, the elongated individual who has been one of Mr. Jennings' many sensations, is about due to be fired into a fray.

BASEBALL NEWS AND NOTES

PITCHER SHABEK OF THE HARRISburg team of the Tri-State League has won fifteen games in a row. This is high class pitching in any kind of a league.

* * *

SAM AGNEW HAS FULLY RECOVERED from the effects of his broken jaw and is now dividing the work of the St. Louis catching with Crossin. They are a great team of youngsters.

* * *

EDDIE MURPHY OF THE ATHLETICS has gone to his home in White Mills, Pa., to rest up after his recent illness. Jimmy Walsh will play the position until Murphy comes back.

* * *

JACK HOEY, WHO PLAYED ONE OF THE outfield positions for Hartford in the 23-inning game on Tuesday, was in the outfield for Boston on September 1, 1906, when the Athletics and Red Sox played 24 innings—the longest game ever played in the major leagues.

* * *

A YEAR AGO THIS TIME THE ATHletics were about 100 points in front in the American League race. At the present time the lead is so small that the Mackmen are liable to drop behind at any time.

* * *

THE RECENT ABSENCE OF TY COBB brought out a fine ball player in Heilman, who played centre field for the Tigers. Heilman is no Cobb, but he was good enough to hold his own in major league ball.

* * *

BALTIMORE FANS, SURE OF A FEDERAL League pennant some weeks back, are about ready to give up hope. Injuries have shot the team to pieces during the past few days. Zinn will play no more this season.

* * *

THE RED SOX PLAYED THE PENNANT day game at Philadelphia in 1912, defeated the Athletics and then beat out the Mackmen for the pennant. The Browns were the choice for the flag raising day this year and they hope to do a "Boston" on the Athletics.

* * *

THE ST. LOUIS BROWNS ARE MAKING a great hit around the circuit through a five minute act of "shadow ball," which they put on before the games. Philadelphia fans went wild over the exhibition.

* * *

CLARENCE WALKER IS THE LATEST terror to come in prominence in the American League batting. Crawford, Baker and Collins were dangerous enough, but now Ty Cobb has another dangerous rival for the batting honors.

* * *

THE COMEBACK OF JIM VAUGHN HAS already reached the stage of certainty. The former Yankee is getting to be as great a Giant killer as some of the famous Cubs of other years. He has taken their number four times.

* * *

CHARLEY MULLEN, THE NEW FIRST baseman of the Yankees, was batting .281 for the Denver team when he left the Western League. Lejeune, the noted thrower, who has been tried out by Brooklyn and other major league clubs, leads that league with .414.

* * *

O'DAY HAS A STRONG TEAM, AND IF he lands a shortstop and one more reliable hurler, McGraw's men will indeed be lucky if they cop the flag. Hank has a great array of sluggers on his team. Zimmerman, Sweeney, Schulte, Saier and Leach all being timely and deadly swatsmen.

BRAVES OPEN SERIES WITH THE PIRATES

PITTSBURGH, July 20.—Manager George Stallings and his band of Boston Braves came into town this morning to open a four game engagement with Fred Clark's Pirates and they were a happy lot.

The Braves arrived here from Cincinnati where they annexed three easy victories in a row and every member of the party felt confident of winning the majority of the games here and incidentally boosting themselves in the league standing.

Manager Stallings has his men playing championship ball at the present time while it can be said that the Pirates are going none too good. Since the Braves left the East they have won three out of four games with the Chicago Cubs, won two and lost two in St. Louis and took all three form Charlie Herzog's Reds.

The Braves have several pitchers ready to enter the games here, including Otto Hess, Paul Strand, Davis, Tyler, Rudolph and Bill James. James has always been effective against the Pirates and he is sure to appear for the Braves in one games of the series. Hess is another pitcher on the Stallings' payroll that has been successful against Pittsburgh in the past and is sure to give the Pirates a hard game.

The local fans will surely turn out to see the Braves perform, as Maranville is a big attraction in this town. Johnny Evers also has many friends here and they want to see him perform alongside the wonderful shortstop.

Little Dick Crutcher pitched for Boston yesterday at Cincinnati and his work was of the highest order. He held the Reds down to four scattered hits and in all but the seventh inning had matters under perfect control.

The Boston's have surprised the fans with their wonderful strength on this trip. They have been walloping all of the teams and the Reds look just like the others to Stallings.

Shamrock IV. Stops at Plymouth Harbor

PLYMOUTH, July 20.—Shamrock IV., Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger for the America's cup, which sailed from Portsmouth under convoy of the steam yacht Erwin, put into Plymouth this evening because of stress of weather.

The Shamrock was on her way to Falmouth, from which port she will start for the United States. The challenger will remain here, however, until the weather shows improvement.

WHILE the Camp Supper is cooking and the water boils merrily in the kettle swinging on its rustic crane, it's doubly pleasant to sit down way back there in the hills and read the news of the working world as told in a big metropolitan newspaper.

The new stable is considered one of the finest in the country. It is 110 feet front by 250 feet deep, containing fifty-four box stalls, each stall 10x14 feet.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

Tom Morton, college man, tall and plain, enjoying a comfortable inheritance and a prosperous business, has won the hand and heart of Edith Hale, after her return from a "finishing" course in Europe. To save his dashing, heedless young cousin, Ralph, from a financial predicament, Tom consents to cancel an evening's engagement with his fiancee and run over to Baltimore to settle the embarrassing debt.

Ralph, always popular with women, and long a friend and favorite of Edith's, offers to call at the handsome Hale house in Homewood to cheer her in her disappointment at missing a talk with Tom. The latter's telephoned explanation for his proposed absence (he does not reveal the cause for it) leaves his fiancee vexed that business can be more important than a talk over plans for their own engagement dinner—planned for the following night.

Constance Medford, a tactful, sensible young cousin, who lives with the Hales, champions Tom as Edith pouts. "Perhaps Ralph will come over. If so, I shall not miss Tom, for Ralph is such fun."

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER IV.

"I THOUGHT Tom was to be here tonight," Mr. Hale remarked as the family gathered about the dining-table. "Why didn't he come?"

"Oh," replied his daughter with a vexed laugh, "he let a little matter of business keep him away. He telephoned to me an hour or two ago about it."

"I'm sorry not to have the boy with us," her father said, "but I do like the conscientious spirit he shows about his work."

"Yes," Mrs. Hale agreed. "He does not let inclination interfere with duty."

Edith was silent. From her face one could not guess her thoughts.

Dinner was almost ended when there was a ring at the front door bell, and a moment later a servant announced "Mr. Ralph Morton."

"Let him come right in and have a cup of coffee with us," Mrs. Hale ordered, and her daughter supplemented it with "Why, yes; of course!"

The most prejudiced observer could hardly deny that it was a good-looking man who entered. As he paused in the doorway, his face lighted by a smile that displayed his flashing teeth, his dark eyes glancing from one to the other of the family group, Constance acknowledged to herself that Ralph Morton was far better-looking than his more sober cousin, and that he possessed a personal magnetism which would be hard to resist were he to consider it worth while to exert it.

This evening he evidently desired to make himself agreeable, and he bent low over his hostess' hand, thanking her for allowing him to come in "just like one of the family." Then he shook hands heartily with his host, cordially with Constance and almost affectionately with Edith. His voice took on an added gentleness as he spoke to her, half-familiarly, half-teasingly.

"I did not need an excuse to bring me here this evening," he said to her, "but had I needed one I had it in the fact that I am the bearer of a message of regret from Tom. He is detained in town by business."

"He telephoned me that he could not come," replied the girl, looking at him keenly. "But he told me he had been called out of the city."

RALPH EMBARRASSED

Ralph flushed with embarrassment. Editha, noting this, wondered just why Tom Morton was remaining away from her. Was it "out of town" excuse a false one? Constance Medford, seeing Ralph's discomfiture, wondered with sudden suspicion what he was concealing.

Why should he have said that Tom was staying in New York tonight, when Tom himself had said otherwise? And Ralph Morton, feeling the eyes of both girls focussed upon him, laughed awkwardly.

"Oh, yes," he said, "come to think of it, he did say he was going out of town. I forgot just where. The main point that impressed me was that he could not be here and that he was much disappointed that he could not."

"So he told me over the telephone," Edith remarked dryly.

"Never mind, darling," her mother soothed, hearing the sound of wounded feeling in the girl's voice. "Tomorrow night he will be here for your engagement dinner. I cannot help thinking," she went on, anxious to change the current of her daughter's thoughts, "how much surprised our neighbors will be when they hear that you and Tom are engaged."

The waitress had placed the coffee on the table and had withdrawn, so the mistress felt that she could speak without restraint.

"For, you know, Ralph," she continued, "you two boys have been here so much with my two girls that I do not believe any outsiders know which girl is engaged to which boy, or if there is any engagement at all."

Ralph laughed and looked across the table at Constance. "Well, I declare, Miss Constance," he said, jestingly, "it has never occurred to me that people might suspect you and me of having a tender passion for each other! Has you ever thought of it?"

"Indeed I had not!" she exclaimed, trying to laugh lightly. She felt an uneasy doubt about this man. Yet she chided herself for it. He was a decent fellow, if he was conceited, and she was probably unjust to him.

"Cheer up, dear future cousin," Ralph rallied Edith. "Don't look so sad. Only twenty-four hours more and Tom will be here."

"I wasn't even thinking of Tom," she declared. "I was just thinking that it is perfectly silly of you and Constance to call each other 'Mr.' and 'Miss.' You know each other well enough to say 'Ralph' and 'Constance.'"

"I should be honored to do so," replied Ralph gallantly. "How about you, Miss Constance?"

"I will call you just what Edith wishes," Constance evaded.

AN AGREEMENT

"It's an agreement!" exclaimed Edith, as the family arose from the table. She turned toward Ralph as he approached her. "Let's go into the drawing room," she proposed, "and make Connie play for us. But remember, Connie—no more dirges!"

"Why not have a waltz?" suggested Ralph.

"So soon after dinner!" exclaimed Mrs. Hale. But the young couple paid little heed to her and were soon gliding in time to a dreamy waltz tune. At last Edith looked up into her companion's face.

"Why," she murmured, "didn't Tom come tonight? I have a feeling that there is some reason for his absence which neither you nor he has told me."

"If there were," Ralph said softly, peering down into her flushed face, a glow of admiration in his eyes, "I would have no right to tell you. You are his property, you know. I am only an outsider." His laugh was bitterly. "I have no right to give any inside information—nor to say what I think, nor—worse luck—what I feel."

Edith attempted to smile, but suspicion seized her. It was coupled with it was a vague wonder if, after all, she could ever love Tom as deeply as she had thought she could love him—as dearly, for instance, as she might love a very different kind of man—a man perhaps, who loved her more enthusiastically, who had the right to bring a blush making her cheeks hot—a man like Ralph!

The Girl in Her Teens

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

WHEN a girl is in her early teens she needs her mother most.

Mothers have very advanced care of their little children and chaperon their young lady daughters conventionally, but they generally leave the girl of fourteen or fifteen to shift for herself.

She seems too young for problems and sweethearts, she is old enough to attend to the small concerns of life for herself, and since she does not need to be taken care of like a child, she is not guarded as she grows to womanhood.

The girl of fifteen often runs the streets after dark. She has her "beaux" all sorts of boys whom she might never to know. She frequents the movies, the parks, the public fountains and the beaches in Summer and may even go to cheap cabarets in Winter and because she comes home before dinner and goes to bed at 9 o'clock no one dreams she may be coming to harm.

A DANGEROUS PATH

Granted that her own good moral fibre, her early training, and the atmosphere of her home keep her from actual wrongdoing, still—what of her fineness, her girlish sweetness, her modesty?

She finds herself growing restless as she ceases to stand "with reluctant feet where brook and river meet."

She takes one wild leap and strikes out into the deeper waters. She becomes a noisy, silly, giggling creature, who lives on fudge and "sundaes," and absurd love affairs and trashy novels.

She learns to value the froth of life instead of the "golden wine of living."

The girl in her teens needs a friend—her mother!

NEEDS A GUIDE

She needs some one to guide and comfort her, to sympathize with and understand her. She needs a home to which to bring her friends—and it should be splendid for her to keep her in a wholesale group of happy young folks TOGETHER and not wandering off into dangerous by and girl intimacies in emotional young couples who do not understand themselves.

She would have sensible relations with boys if she saw them in a frank, natural home environment and was saved from premature pairing off.

The girl in her teens needs a mother who will not ignore romance that grows apace in the heart of youth. The mother who "plays fair" with her girl will cultivate the dream in youth's heart so that it will prove an flowers not in weeds.

The girl in her teens needs of all things on earth sympathy, guidance, and understanding love to bring her unscathed to her high heritage of womanhood.

Something Saved

It was the morning of the Sabbath. As Sandy was making his way homeward after attending service the minister happened to overtake him.

"Eh," said Sandy, "that was a powerful discourse on 'Thrift' ye preached this morning."

The minister smiled benignly.

"A'm glad ye were able to profit by it," was his gratified reply.

"Profit," exclaimed Sandy. "Why, noon, I would ha' put my ten cents into the plate wi'out a thought but for yer providential words. They saved me five cents there and then."

One He Married, the Other He REMEMBERS

"The Country Boy with a Gardenia Over His Heart Will Long for a Daisy Sure."

THE man who was a Country-Boy elite sometimes with his fighting chin sunk in his fine shirt-front, when his perfect woman that he won seems specially to glitter cold and hard, when the stones that blaze on her rose-tipped fingers, arms and hair seem, even more than usual, an icy conflagration—his eyes blinded and wearied by her splendor, his feet weary of her tango-teas, his heart tired of her shallow eyes and perfect, gem-like finger-tips and gone a-yearning for homely things.

With all her gorgeous beauty weighing heavier than most days, in the back of his head that he lost over a lass who was not his simple kind grows the picture of the girl who stood at his "country elbow" and he might have had!

And her eyes are wide open and unclouded and she looks like wholesome things—"corn-bread and buttermilk" and fields of wheat (that's her hair) with poppies growing through (that's her lips below the wind-ruffled hair)—and he remembers that she hated to pick a flower "cause it dies, you know," and she loved all live things and little kids!

One he married—and when she glitters too cold, too bright—the other he REMEMBERS! When you wear a flower—Country-Boy who is or was—which should it be for you—gardenias, heavy and waxen and scented and hot-house grown—or a daisy with a golden heart from the open field?—NELL BRINKLEY.

A Bachelor's Diary

By MAX

JULY 1—Marian Church came back from her vacation today. She was very sweet and well bred, and told me that she had a lot to be grateful for, as my friend Mr. Farnham had been so wonderful to her and had taken her on such beautiful little motor rides. "I didn't see Miss Gresham again," she concluded.

Are all daughters of Eve wily creatures? I wonder just what Marian meant by referring so casually to the "other" girl I had taken along on the Class Day excursion, where I meant Marian to be my honored—and only—guest.

"Will you lunch with me, Miss Church?" I asked.

"I'm so sorry, Mr. Max—but Mr. Farnham is in town and he has made me promise to do the honors of the city."

That hurt—but I almost laughed in her face. Rex Farnham knew the city before Maid Marian was born. And a pretty young stenographer was not fair prey for Rex Farnham—that is, not when I knew the pretty young stenographer! But I couldn't say a word. For how was Marian to be assured that it was not jealousy that prompted me? In fact, how was I to know that it was not jealousy I promptedt me?

Darrow called me into his office at two.

"Say, old chap, what do you say to a little cruise on my boat over the Fourth? I've asked a couple of my good customers—and you know the ropes for these society men far better than any Western tenderfoot like me. You've certainly got it coming to you after the way you put that affair through at Cambridge."

I knew I had it coming to me, but I was getting it in a way of which Darrow knew nothing. I was getting the just deserts of a bungle in my worries over pretty Marian Church.

A BIG SURPRISE

While we were talking things over Darrow was called out and asked me to wait. "And if any messages come for me, take them, will you?"

If he had stayed two minutes longer I would be going on that Fourth of July cruise. As it is—well, Friend Diary, after I have written down on your white pages what happened next, I'll consider if that book too soiled for me to go out with Darrow and Company.

Ting-a-ling-a-ling-linnnng!

"Hello? Yes, this is Mr. Darrow's line"——

And then a voice broke in with a torrent that I could not interrupt:

"Little Sidonie is very ill. She is asking for her father. Won't you come at once, Sidney. The child is dangerously ill—and so we must meet, perhaps—but no scenes, please. Oh, do come quickly—little Sidonie is so ill"——

It was Josephine's voice.

Now I couldn't say coldly: "Madame you are mistaken—this not Mr. Darrow," and leave her to wonder if what stranger she had told her little story. Nor could I say: "I'll see that he gets the message."

Josephine—this is Max I am with Sidney Darrow—in his office—are you his wife?" I gasped.

"I divorced him seven years ago—when my baby was a year old," said Josephine as calmly as if we were continuing a parlor conversation about the tariff. "Will you tell him to come to Sidonie at once. And the receiver clicked up.

A TELEGRAM

Five minutes later Sidney Darrow came in. I gave him Josephine's message.

"I'll go like thunder, said he. "But your baby, man, I cried. "My baby? Josephine's child? A cold-blooded, scheming woman's own child. She has been brought up to forget she has a father. Why, that woman was sick and ashamed of her Western husband and his uncouth ways before the honeymoon was over. My life with her was a malicious torture for two years—and then she took advantage of the fact that a man can't hunt stock and get a divorce. The court gave her the child and gave me the privilege of seeing it four times a year at her discretion. She has brought up little Sidonie to be a cold little Miss Prim like herself. And she only gets me out here when she wants to bleed me for money. I'll not go."

At six Darrow called me into his office and showed a little piece of yellow paper across the table to me. It was a telegram and read:

"Little Sidonie passed away at 5, crying for you. Josephine Osgood."

(In the next instalment Max tells how he celebrated the Fourth of July suitably—with due assistance from Manette and Marian.)

Proof Positive

Dejectedly twirling his thumbs the clerk sat in the box office of the Privolity Theatre. A depressing air of failure hung over the theatre, and it looked as though the place would have to be withdrawn very shortly.

Suddenly he perked up as a countrified man and his wife came in, followed by their three daughters and two sons.

"Have you got seven seats in the middle of the second row for tonight?" asked pater familias.

The box office man made a pretense of examining the plan of seats.

"Yes, I find they are vacant, sir," said he, trying to repress his excitement. "Shall I book them for you, sir?"

"No—no, I think not," said the man from the country. "If you've got those seats on your hands it seems to me the play can't be up to much! Good morning!"

Among the offences for which capital punishment can be ordered in English law today are high treason and arson in a royal dockyard or arsenal.

At the newest and tallest skyscraper in New York a lift or elevator dropped suddenly 600 feet without anyone being injured. As a matter of fact there were no passengers for it was a testing experiment. The car was placed at the forty-seventh floor, and was weighted with cast-iron up to a total of 7,200 pounds, representing its full capacity if crowded with passengers. It was then set free by the pulling of a latch-string. This lift was falling at the rate of two miles a minute when it reached the air-cushion tube which begins at the eleventh floor. Then its speed diminished gradually, until it arrived at the bottom as gently as a feather.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

SUM of us club ladies has a new idea, sed Ma to Pa last nite.

How wunderful, sed Pa, jest to think that you dear old gals talk the time onst in a while to git a new idea. It is truly refreshing, sed Pa. it seams like a leaf out of a story book. Well, sed Pa, spill the idee, spill it.

I wish you wuddent use that sporting page slang in front of little Bobbie so much, sed Ma. Well, I will tell you what the idee is, & all of us gurls expect our husbands to help us carry it out. We have made up our minds that we are all going to go anywere on the city streets at nite without a escort if our husbands happens to be at there lodges or clubs.

Well, well, sed Pa, is that the idee? That is the idee, sed Ma, & I am sure it is a sensibel idee. Think of the thousands of wimmen that stay in the home nites, sed Ma, wen there husbands is too busy to talk them anywere. They stay in there hoams beekaus of the old, foolish noshun that a respecktabel woman wuddent go out alone at nite. What do you think of the idee?

Well, sed Pa, I dont know. There are so many of the old noshuns & old fashuns getting the K. O. punch these days that I am never a bit sur-prised wen I hear of sum new fad. But I must say, sed Pa, that this idee is a littel more sensi-ble than sum of the latest fads. I cant seem to think of any good reason why a good woman can't go on an errand or go calling on a nabor without a escort, if she wants to talk the chanse. I shall maik no objeckshun to the new skeem, eether Pa, & shall talk to my gentleman frends about it, too.

I told all the ladies at the club how good & nsabel you are in things like that, sed Ma. You are a dear. Now I can talk littel Bobbie with me if I want to go to visit a nabor, or if it is after his bed time I can leave him with the maid & go for a stroll. I thank you, my deer husband, for the grand stand wich you have took on this skrate question. I must go & tell the other gurls about it, sed Ma.

Yes, sed Pa, tell them I am for it, & if you want to, you can tell them the reeder is for it, too. You see, sed Pa, it has been in the past that wen I went to lodge I always felt a littel gilty about leaving you alone after lodge with the boys, bekaus I knew all the time you would be at hoam alone, waiting for me. The way the gals are going to swing it now, sed Pa, we can meet each other every time we git hoam after the lodge. We shall be happy in the knowledge that our wifes are out roamin' around & drinking in the beauties of the night, & wile they are drinking in the beauties of the night we can stick around that much longer drinking to a littel moar of the same. It is a grate idee, a grate idee, sed Pa.

Then Ma looked at Pa kind of funny & beegan to think.

Now that I think it over, deer, sed Ma, I am not so sure I want to go into this thing. Of course if you intend to stay out all nite at the lodge, I shall stay at hoam the lodge nites, & the other nites you always escort me anthow. We must see it that the all of us gurls thought it was about as sensibel as any new move we have made.

So it is, sed Pa, just about as sensibel.

Not What He Expected

He came into the police station, his hands clenched, and his eyebrows sweeping downward toward the bridge of his nose.

"How much do you charge in a case of assault and battery?"

"That depends—about $20."

"You can break quite a stuffing out of a man for that, can't you?"

"Possibly."

"I'll give you a fiver in advance."

"If you want to," laughed the inspector.

The visitor laid two $10 bills on the desk.

"I'm going to lick a man, and I don't want any interference from the police while I do it." And he stalked out muttering.

Half an hour afterwards a man came in. Both his eyes were puffed, his clothes crooked, one clothing was hanging on him in rags.

"Well," he said, gently, "do you recognize me?"

"Can't say that I do."

"Oh! Well, what do you want now?"

"Would you mind giving me $10.50 back?"

MAYOR SCORED BY TWO PASTORS IN CAMBRIDGE

As a result of his refusal to oust Commissioner of Public Safety Henry J. Cunningham, Mayor Timothy Good was severely criticized from two Cambridge pulpits by pastors, members of the "committee of fifteen."

The Mayor was not spared as the ministers voiced their stories of the meeting in City Hall last Monday in which the Mayor told them that Commissioner of Public Safety Henry J. Cunningham was a faithful official and they "ought to be ashamed of themselves" for asking his removal on "such flimsy evidence as they produced."

"When we went to the Mayor's office we were treated with rudeness and in an ungentlemanly manner," said the Rev. J. L. Campbell of the Central Baptist Church. "Had the Mayor been counsel for the lawbreakers we are seeking to drive from the city, he could not have been more of a partisan. He shook his fist in the face of one of the most respected of our numbers; poured out inuendoes and never for a moment let us doubt as to what his decision would be."

The Rev. Richard Wright, pastor of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, said:

"The attitude of the Mayor may be taken to indicate that he is 'crossing the scents.' It may be, realizing the sheer weakness of his position in retaining Commissioner Cunningham in the face of the strong evidence of unrestricted law-breaking in Cambridge in declaring that our evidence is 'flimsy,' he is drawing red herring across the path of the hunt in an endeavor to deceive the good people.

"He said we are actuated by ulterior motives. Well, I will say now that if Cunningham does his duty and drives the lawbreakers out of the city, I am willing that he should be retained. Not only that, but we will all sing his praises, and I will lead the chorus."

M'Call, Ready to Head G. O. P. Ticket Here, Flays Wilson

Former Congressman Samuel W. McCall, having signified his willingness to accept the Republican nomination for Governor, friends of his today began work for the September primaries. In a statement he arraigns the Wilson administration for "not intervening but meddling" in Mexico.

Says the Wilson trust program "threatens to put business in a straight jacket."

Charges the Democrats of the national government with employing "obsolete principles" in legislation.

Declares the Underwood tariff bill has "deranged our domestic production."

Brands the promises of reduced cost of living as "mythical."

Flays the foreign policies of Wilson and Bryan.

Auto News

By J. C. KERRISON.

The position taken by the Metropolitan Park Commission in declining to open the Revere Beach boulevard to automobiles on Saturday, Sunday and holiday afternoons is not calling forth any great amount of criticism from those who motor and who are willing that others should enjoy some of the pleasures of the summer.

To operate a motor vehicle over that portion of the Revere Beach parkway lying between Eliot Circle and Revere street is at the best a nerve-racking performance, and on such days as those specified it is particularly trying. At the best one can only crawl along that boulevard, and then he is in imminent danger of colliding with some pedestrian.

It is perhaps a hardship to force motorists to use Ocean avenue on these days, but what is the hardship of a few thousand motorists as compared with the pleasure and enjoyment of thousands upon thousands of people who are not in a position to enjoy the things possessed by motorists.

Motorists who are bound for the north or south of Revere Beach are not by any means compelled to use Ocean avenue or the boulevard. The old Lynn turnpike from Revere to Lynn is in fine condition and offers an avenue of travel which is far superior to Ocean avenue and fully the equal of the boulevard and requires no great detour. The usual route going north can be followed along the boulevard to Broadway, Revere, where the turn to the left is made, and for three-quarters of a mile or so the going is perhaps bad, but after that a fine macadam road stretches out in front, runs across the Lynn marshes and into Lynn, so that by using this road the motorists can travel from the north or south without any great inconvenience.

LATEST STOCK MARKETS

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor

Stocks were weaker this afternoon, having failed to recover from an early recessional. Trading had been of fair volume only. Early afternoon declines in New York included Chesapeake & Ohio ¼, St. Paul 1¼, Canadian Pacific ¾, Missouri Pacific ¼, Reading ¾, Lehigh Valley 1½, New Haven 1, American Telephone ½, American Can ⅝, Steel ⅜, Amalgamated ½, American Smelting ¼, Northern Pacific ½, Baltimore & Ohio 1⅝, New York Central ⅞ and Texas Company 3¾. Union Pacific, selling ex-warrant 30½, was at 126¾. It closed Saturday at 157¼ and opened today at 126. Steel had sold previously at 59⅞ and was than at 60. Southern Pacific was up ⅛. St. Paul, Reading, Lehigh Valley and Texas Company had all recovered part of earlier losses.

In Boston New York weakness was reflected. Boston & Maine was off 1⅛ at 31⅛, but previously one share had sold at 30½. New Haven was off 1 at 53, its lowest today up to that time. Elevated was unchanged and United Fruit off ⅞. American Telephone had receded ¼. Mines to show losses included Butte & Superior ¼, Calumet & Arizona ⅛ and was up ⅛.

OPENED ON LOWER LEVEL.

Prices were on a little lower level when the New York market opened, most attention being given to Union Pacific, which sold minus the special dividend 30½, occasioned by the distribution of Baltimore & Ohio stock. This stock had been held in the Union Pacific treasury. Union Pacific grew stronger after the opening and by noon was up a point from its morning low. Traders said today's quotations were cheap for an 8 per cent. stock. Baltimore & Ohio sold down to 82¾ during the forenoon, it being argued that there would be a larger supply of this issue on the market for some time because of the distribution.

The weakness of Americans in London, where Baltimore & Ohio, Canadian Pacific, Pennsylvania and Union Pacific declined more than a point each, was an adverse influene in New York. But in the latter market prices averaged above the London level. The Ulster situation is acute enough to affect the British market. It was said, however, that the decline in Americans was largely due to selling on New York orders. From information received from this country the English expect an unfavorable decision on the eastern rate case.

EASTERN RATE CASE REPORTS.

One statement from Washington regarding the rate case quotes Interstate Commerce Commissioner Harlan as saying: "It is the hope of the commission to reach final conclusions by the end of the week." It is denied on behalf of the commission that any forecast of their decision is correct. It is said that some points remain undecided and that that is why conferences will be held this week. Commissioner McChord was called back from Atlantic City to attend them. One was begun this morning and will, it is understood, occupy all day. Doubt as to the character of the ruling which is to be framed this week was a check upon speculation. It is expected to be bearish, but few operators are willing to incur much hazard in using this view as a basis for commitments. A hesitant market seems likely while the decision is pending.

RAILROAD EARNINGS.

With the rate case the most engrossing topic in trading circles, railroad statistics are closely scanned. For May, the Interstate Commerce Commission reports, roads in this country had operating revenue totalling $232,567,938, expenses of $176,029,940 and operating income of $44,446,855. The total net operating revenues of the principal roads for the eleven months ended by May was $763,931,274, while their operating revenue amounted to $2,747,275,207 and their operating expenses to $1,981,324,232. The Eastern roads asking for a 5 per cent. rate increase had net revenue amounting to $290,063,333. Five per cent. added to this would go a long day towards paying dividends.

5,000 TO MARCH AS PROTEST ON LIGHT CONTRACT

Union organizations plan an army of 5,000 men and women to march to City Hall in protest against Mayor Curley's proposed $5,500,000 electric lighting contract when the next hearing is held.

The descent upon City Hall is intended to emphasize the protest of organized labor against the signing of the contract.

Officers of the Engineers' and Electrical Workers' Unions are making plans for this demonstration. A precedent for this form of protest was established among labor organization during the street carmen's strike, when several thousand carmen marched to the State House.

The Boston Central Labor Union favors a municipal street lighting system and has adopted resolutions calling upon the State authorities to investigate the lighting contract.

Labor leaders charge the company is a monopoly and in such control of the electric lighting situation that competition is impossible.

The resolutions further requested that the Mayor and City Council reconsider the proposed ten-year contract and urged Governor Walsh to instruct the gas and electric light commission thoroughly to investigate the relations between the Edison Company and the city.

GLADYS CHASE FOUND, CASE IS STILL MYSTERY

A much greater mystery surrounds the finding of Gladys P. Chase, the thirteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Chase of No. 49 Brook avenue, Roxbury, who disappeared from the home of her sister, Mrs. Leon Hope Adams, No. 41 Dix street, Ashmont, as enveloped her going away.

The girl was located at the home of Mrs. Henry R. Devine, No. 15 Holden street, Dorchester, by her mother and Special Officer Williams.

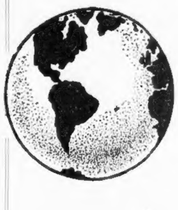

At the home of the girl's sister it was said Gladys was now at the home of her mother. At the latter home, Mrs. Chase admitted she had seen her daughter, but was unwilling to say where she was now.

Fred Dormer, twenty-three, of Pearl street, Somerville, who, it was alleged, had run away with the girl, recently wrote to the girl's sister, denying he had anything to do with her disappearance and offered to assist in finding her.

Mrs. Devine said today she did not know the girl had been reported missing.

Woman, 75, Nearly Drowns.

Mrs. Mary Flaherty, seventy-five, of No. 119 Sixth street, South Boston, fell from a wharf on Castle Island and was nearly drowned. Henry Hutchinson of No. 14 Leland street, Roxbury, saved her.

Making a Flat World Round

When Columbus set out to reach India by sailing westward he met with opposition and ridicule.

He believed the earth to be round.

Wise men maintained that it was flat—that Columbus was mad—and that he'd fall off somewhere if he departed from established beliefs.

But Columbus' belief found him a continent and made him blessed of memory.

The Business World is flat to some men. Their profit-bearing shores of Opportunity stretch only as far as their grandfathers trod. Custom, superstition and apathy have set confines which they may not pass.

For instance, they believe the business year is a flat one—not an all-year-round of trade, with East joining West, with Spring merging into Autumn—but just two distinct seasons, with sawed-off edges gaping into space.

They confine their activities to a Spring trade and to a Fall trade. To them there is no intervening continent with shores of waiting wealth. Their world is flat. They have not explored the mid-year months of Summer trade.

Surely this conception of Summer as a "dull" season is as fallacious as the delusion that the earth was flat. People have just as much money in the hot weather and spend quite as freely as in Spring and Fall. Of course, they are not buying skates and snow shovels in July, yet they are buying staple articles. Furthermore, they have an eye on luxuries and comforts they are counting upon purchasing in the Fall.

The modern Columbus has discovered this Summer trade—this golden West lying between the known continents of old beliefs. Departing from established habit, many have made their energies and their advertising an all-year-round proposition.

Keeping up Advertising during the Summer months not only links your Spring and Fall, but produces rich harvests from the Summer months themselves.

The Responsible New Haven Directors Should Resign

The great Interstate Commerce Commission has found that certain members of the present Board of Directors of the New Haven railroad have been guilty of conduct for which they are civilly and criminally liable. This powerful public body finds also that the New Haven railroad has wasted millions upon millions of dollars for which these directors ought to be made responsible in their private estates by the railroad that has suffered this tremendous loss from their misconduct.

A firm of distinguished Boston attorneys has already demanded, on behalf of some New Haven stockholders, that the New Haven railroad shall bring suit against these directors.

All this presents an impossible anomaly. These directors control the railroad corporations. The suit for the recovery of these lost millions must be made by the railroad against these directors AND THESE DIRECTORS CONTROL THE RAILROAD.

When he served notice of the demand of the clients, as stockholders of the New Haven, that this railroad should prosecute the directors responsible for its losses, Mr. Whipple was obliged to serve this notice upon the very directors whom he was demanding that the railroad should sue. In other words, the stockholders of the New Haven, in order to get back their money, MUST MAKE THE DIRECTORS SUE THEMSELVES.

This is bad enough, but it is not by any means the worst feature of the present situation. Every day in which the New Haven continues to control the Boston & Maine Railroad, it is violating the anti-trust law. A considerable element of the directors' LEGAL liability grows out of the illegal acquisition of the Boston & Maine and of the trolleys. Therefore, these directors are under the temptation always of attempting to save their own skins at the expense of the railroad property and of its stockholders. They are constantly tempted to move the railroad about as a pawn in the controversy with the national government, according as they think it will affect their own personal liability for past misconduct.

The public interest, as well as the interest of the stockholders of the New Haven, is seriously concerned in this anomalous situation by which directors are left in control of the railroad, the duty of which is to prosecute them and the interest of which clearly is to repudiate the lawless monopoly that they sought to establish, even though it may fix more certainly the legal liability of those who are responsible for its lawless conduct during the past seven years.

If these responsible directors are at all chastened by recent events, or have the slightest sense of propriety, what ought they to do? CLEARLY THEY OUGHT TO RESIGN. Their presence on the Board of Directors is positively indecent.

But the duty of relieving the New Haven railroad of the embarrassment of their domination is so manifest that the stockholders will be more stupid than even stockholders usually are, if they do not throw them out unceremoniously at their next meeting. Yet this extreme course is probably not necessary. It is inconceivable that these men should be so lost to all sense of self-respect and of their own higher interests, that they will insist upon clinging to their places against all the rules of the game.

The New Haven railroad can never come back to its own, its stockholders can never recover their losses, until the public is given something more than mere promises of reform. The men who have brought it to its present low estate will never be trusted again as faithful governors of a great public utility. The first step in the restoration of public confidence must be the departure of William Rockefeller, and those of his confederates who yet remain, from the Board of Directors of the New Haven.

These directors could very well follow the good example of J. P. Morgan and resign to save the railroad further embarrassment.

Three Thousand Steel Cars on One Railroad

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company

One-third of all the steel passenger cars in the United States are used by one railroad—the Pennsylvania.

Is there any good reason why the other railroads of the United States should not be made—in spite of their piteous cries of poverty—to imitate the example of the Pennsylvania and use steel cars instead of the dangerous wooden cars?

We do not suggest any impossible law that would replace all wooden cars by steel cars IMMEDIATELY.

To do that would cost five hundred millions of dollars, and the railroads haven't got five hundred millions of dollars to spend, all at once.

But it would be reasonable for government inspectors to examine the cars, forbid the use of those that are unusually weak and dangerous, AND COMPEL ALL NEW CARS TO BE MADE OF STEEL.

If an owner builds a theatre, a tenement house, a bridge, he is compelled to consider public safety, and not merely private economy.

In accidents steel cars save the passengers' lives, wooden cars break, burn and destroy life.

If the government owned the railroads, there would be no question of building or buying wooden cars. The public uses the cars, owns the government, and would say, "SPEND MY MONEY TO PROTECT MY LIFE."

The Pennsylvania Railroad gets no higher rate per mile or per ton than any other railroad. The Pennsylvania has discarded wooden cars to buy steel cars. The other railroads might at least buy steel cars as rapidly as the old cars of wood are worn out, and as rapidly as increased traffic demands new cars.

When her social duties bore her, and she looks at bridge askance,
When no longer there's excitement in sojourning in a cell,

She puts on her grandest raiment and with infinite delight,
While her red blood thrills with in her, saunters out to see a fight.

SURE! She goes to see the prize fight,
And she sits beside the ring,
And encourages the fighters,
While they jab and smash and swing.
You can hear her soft voice cooing, "Hi there, slam his peepers shut."
"Hook a lefter to his breather; land that lightning uppercut,
"He'll be winded in a minute. Soak him in the slats, the mutt!
"And we'll have another champion in the morning."

ROUND about milady gather all her social set;
Clergy madly crowd around her in the hope to place a bet.
And that fellow over yonder with the whaling wad of pelf,
It is whispered that he may be, a sure! His Majesty, himself.
But my lady notes them little, for she glories in the sight

The Mystery of the Gulf Stream

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

A YEAR or so ago a proposal was seriously urged upon the attention of Congress and of the American people to change the course of the Gulf Stream by means of gigantic barriers to be erected on the banks near Newfoundland.

The avowed purpose of this great engineering enterprise, conceived on a truly Martian scale of magnificent defiance to nature, was to improve the climatic conditions along the Atlantic seaboard of the United States by bringing the warm waters of the Gulf Stream closer inshore.

The fact was not blinked, but openly avowed, that such a change in the course of the vast "oceanic river" would have a disastrous effect upon the climate of the British Isles, which is now one of the most genial and salubrious in the world, and this in spite of the fact that those isles lie in so high a latitude that if there were transported straight across the Atlantic they would drop down in northern Labrador and Hudson's Bay. But the inventor of the scheme did not trouble himself about other people's climates—he was only interested in bettering our own.

Whether or no this bold Yankee proposition was taken seriously in England, at least it seems to have been the signal for a manifestation there of renewed interest in the Gulf Stream as one of the grandest and most mysterious of all terrestrial phenomena, and a recent lecture on the subject by Commander Campbell Hepworth, delivered before the Royal Geographical Society, has just found its way into British scientific journals.

Commander Hepworth unhesitatingly places himself in opposition to those who hold that the supposed influence of the Gulf Stream on the British climate is a myth. He brings a great account of statistical information into play to prove that "the warm, relatively high-salinity water which undoubtedly exercises an ameliorating effect upon the climate of our Islands and upon that of northwestern Europe generally, is mainly of equatorial origin and is directly attributable to the influence of the Gulf Stream."

But if the Gulf Stream benefits the climate of England, it is equally ministerial in damaging ours. It is an American institution, for it takes its rise in the Gulf of Mexico; yet it appears to reserve its beneficence for the Old Country. It performs its functions in somewhat the same spirit in which some persons would like to see the Panama Canal perform the functions.

A glance at a "physical geography" will show how the Gulf Stream, after starting northward close along the southern part of the Atlantic coast, begins at first gradually, and then rapidly to turn away toward the centre of the Atlantic, while the cold Labrador Current, sweeping down from Davis' Strait, with its burden of icebergs, encounters the warm stream off the Newfoundland banks, and, by virtue of the eastward trend of the stream at that point, is thrown in toward Nova Scotia and the shores of New England.

It is to this that we owe our cold, late Springs, while the varying stages of the perpetual struggle between the Gulf Stream and the Labrador Current are reflected in the changeable and insalubrious character of our weather during many months.

There is a good deal of popular misapprehension concerning the flow of the Gulf Stream. It is often spoken of as a river in the ocean, and to a certain extent it does resemble a stupendous river. Where it issues from the Strait of Florida it is fifty miles wide, and sweeps the rocky bottom at a depth of about 2,000 feet. Its color is blue, in contrast with the greenish water through which it passes, with quite sharply defined borders. Its surface speed is five miles an hour, but diminishes rapidly to about sixty miles a day off the Carolina coast, forty miles off Nantucket, and less than thirty near the Grand Banks.

As it passes out into the deep sea, after sheering off from the American coast, it no longer touches the bottom or comes anywhere near it. Its depth diminishes as its breadth increases, until it is probably not more than 200 to 300 feet deep, flowing over a cushion of cold water beneath. Its temperature also rapidly diminishes with depth, most of its heat being confined to its surface layers.

What makes this river in the sea? What keeps it flowing? The answer is, "the wind." The ultimate source of the Gulf Stream is the great Equatorial Current which is kept in continual motion westward by the trade winds (and the trade winds arise from the rotation of the earth). Encountering the projecting and southward sloping shoulder of South America, the Equatorial Current is turned northwestward into the Caribbean Sea, and the Gulf of Mexico. The latter is a round trip for the water driven into it. The water is "heaped up" in the Gulf until it attains a general level at least three feet higher than that of the Atlantic off New York. It escapes, as already described, through the Florida Strait, and here the true Gulf Stream takes its origin. Long before it reaches the British Isles it has spread out like a fan, and ceased to resemble a river, but it still carries a considerable quantity of the heat derived from the equatorial sun.

Ocean currents have an enormous effect in governing the climate of many parts of the earth, and who knows but that the time will come when we shall really be able to change their direction sufficiently to largely transform the face of the globe?

Ought a Man to Push the Perambulator?

This Man Thinks Not, but Why Should He Be Humiliated by Passing His Friends Any More Than the Mother Is?

By DOROTHY DIX

WHO should push the perambulator when a man and his wife and the baby go out for a walk?

I have received a letter from a man, who writes:

"Why should a man have to wheel his child through the city streets? Why should not his wife do it? It is most humiliating to a man to pass his friends while he is pushing a baby cart, and to have to listen to their remarks. It is surely a woman's duty, but I do not like to quarrel with my wife, so I am asking your opinion on the subject, for which I will be very grateful."

What's the matter with pushing the baby carriage as a respectable job for a family man? What is there about it to make a man blush and hang his head in shame? I fail to see in it anything derogatory to masculine dignity. It seems to me that a man with the perambulator is far more admirable than the man with the automobile, and that it is better to take the baby for a ride than it is to take a chorus girl.

The man who thinks that he looks ridiculous when he is seen taking a baby out riding in his little go-cart would be filled with pride and vainglory at the spectacle he presented tearing up the streets in a high-powered racing car.

Yet he is a million times more useful and worthily employed in trundling the baby wagon than he would be in smashing records and dodging the traffic police in a gasoline wagon.

And let me remind my correspondent right here that trundling the baby cart may be the short cut to fame for him. For in these perambulators that unwilling fathers are pushing are the infants who are going to be the men and women who will do the big things of the future. The only job by which many a man will be remembered is that he used to wheel some little Tommy Edison, or Teddy Roosevelt, or Pippy Morgan about in his go-cart.

In all good faith, the men who are doing the most for the world are those who are raising up nice, fat, healthy babies—babies who are going to carry on to new heights the banner of human achievement, and why any man should be ashamed of publicly announcing his part in this great work passes comprehension.

Certainly the times are out of joint, and we have gotten to a place where we take a very decadent view of things when a man is humiliated by being seen on the street giving his own child an outing, and when such a spectacle is the subject for the gibes and mocking of fools.

Happily, though, sensible people are still of the opinion that a baby is a thing to boast of, and not be ashamed of, and that a young man pushing his own baby carriage is a more admirable spectacle than a raw-boned youth tugging at the leash of a bulldog.

But let no one ever again lay the crime of race suicide at woman's door, since the fathers take so little interest in their offspring that they are not willing to be seen in public with them. Apparently children are no longer considered by their fathers as a crown of glory, but a sort of disgrace that they try to keep hidden and out of sight as far as possible.

As for my correspondent's contention that it is a woman's duty to push the perambulator, that is as may be. To the dispassionate observers it would seem that, inasmuch as a father is just as much a father as a mother is a mother, it's just as much his business to give the baby an airing as it is hers.

Of course the mother is harnessed to the baby's go-cart most of the time. Six days out of the seven she pushes it ahead of her whenever she takes her walks abroad, just as she listens to the baby's crying and washes and dresses and cares for it seven days out of the week, and this being the case, it appears to be up to the father to take his turn at the wheel occasionally, even if he is mortified to death at being seen out in the company of his own child.

My correspondent is ashamed to be seen pushing a perambulator. I wonder if he ever passes through the residential part of the city between the hours of 10 and 4 o'clock. The streets are a baby blockade. There are hundreds of perambulators, each containing a rosy baby and each baby carriage rolled by some mother who has been told by her doctor that the baby must be kept in the air a certain number of hours.

On the shady side of the street in Summer, in the lee of some sheltering building in Winter, you will find these mothers footsore with walking, weary and bored to death, sweltering with heat or shivering with cold, but faithfully and patiently sacrificing themselves to their children, chained to the baby's go-cart as truly as any captive was ever chained to a conqueror's chariot wheel of old.

And not one of these women is ashamed of her task or mortified at being caught pushing the perambulator!

Funny things, women, aren't they?

The Human Need

By REV C. F. AKED, D. D., LL. D.

THE people need the churches. We all need the inspiration of energy and hope. The pressure of modern life upon us is relentless. Competition is keen, and it will grow keener. The stress and strain will not be less in the coming years. It will be greater.

Lives such as we live are exhausting. At the end of some days of tremendous toil and rush and excitement, of alternating hope and fear, of vast projects tossed from hand to brain and from brain to hand, we may be forgiven if we confess that virtue has gone out of us. Our soul is devitalized, and we know it.

One thing, then, we greatly need. This one thing we have a right to expect from the Church and its ministry. If we fail to receive it we do well to be angry. We demand the inspiration of energy and of hope.

We want the Church in which is the radiant presence of our God, a ministry charged with the hopefulness of Christ, a beautiful, joyous, eternal faith. We need the touch of God's own spirit upon our fainting hearts.

If the Church can bring this to us and to millions of men and women like us, sending us back to vast responsibilities or to humdrum toil, sending us back to enterprise and discovery or to the routine of lowly duty, with a new spirit in us, new seat and fresh determination, so that we feel manhood and womanhood surge through all our being again and we take up the burden of life with both hands and delight in the work we have to do—then the Church has made a contribution of incalculable value to the wealth of the world.

Constituted as we are, living the lives we live, spiritual stimulus, a prompting to the highest, a longing to enter into deep and eternal things and bathe our souls in heavenly splendor, will come to us through the Church or not at all.

We realize that the purpose of religion is the improvement of character, the amelioration of conditions, the elevation of human life. There are truths hidden away in the Incarnation of the Son of God; there are messages in the Atonement not fully grasped by the wisest of us. But this we know, that the sum and substance of the purpose of them all and of all the machinery of redemption is to make more good men and good women.

Religion is a practical thing. Browning's words, virile as himself, are true and righteous altogether:

"I say, the acknowledgment of God in Christ
Accepted by thy reason, solves for thee
All questions in the earth and out of it,
And has done with fear and doubt and hate."

William Ewart Gladstone possessed—according to the judgment of one of his most eminent contemporaries—of the greatest intellect laid at the service of the English Crown in all its thousand years of history, spoke, in one-syllable, every-day words, the secret conviction of the tenderest heart:

"If I am asked to name the one comfort in sorrow, the safe rule of conduct, the true guide of life, I must point to what in the words of a certain popular hymn is called 'The Old, Old Story,' told in an Old, Old Book, which is God's best and richest gift to mankind."

Browning and Gladstone! These two sentences should be weighed. Between them they convey a sense of something, intellectually the most dominant, emotionally the most satisfying, practically the most complete which mind and heart can demand.
